Inspired by my grandmother–Mari Mavu carries classic ideas, thoughts, and memories that speak to the idea that we are all resources with commercial & social value. Human pieces of a gigantic puzzle that breathes as we do. It is premised on the promise of an old Kalanga tale–while grounding us on the value and humanity of each one of us. The pages of this book will not only inspire you but challenge you to see things differently and to occupy your place and reign as the masterpiece that God has designed you to be while aligning yourself with the rewarding spirit of money and fulfilment. Titled in Kalanga, one of Botswana’s popular local languages, but written in English–Mari Mavu doesn’t only seek to promote representation and visibility of African languages, cultural exchange, tourism, and African stories at a global scale. The book also takes the bold step to share perspectives on global issues including unemployment, the future of money, the future of natural talents & work, culture, humanity, and technology through the lenses of African stories.
