Testing the Grit of the Public Service is as much an autobiography of Liman Ciroma as it is a history of the Nigerian public service. Alhaji Dr. Liman Ciroma tell us here, in impeccable prose, the story of his origins and of his journey to the topmost position in the civil service of the Nigerian federation, and beyond. It captures all the momentous events and landmark of the period that spanned his time within the service, and especially those years which he headed it.

This book gives us a great insight into the places and peoples of Nigeria, and it is an observant-participant account of some of the memorable epochs in the history of Nigeria, particularly the years leading up to the tragic civil war and the restructuring that followed.

Testing the Grit of the Public Service is enriched by the comment and tributes of a spectrum of Nigerians whose paths had crossed Alhaji Liman Ciroma's and there is remarkable unanimity in the picture of the subject that they present. If he was a role model in his lifetime, this book should enable Nigerians now and in the future to raw inspiration from Alhaji Liman Ciroma's life and character.

Victor Banjo is the tragic account of a Nigerian military officer who was caught in the crises that engulfed Nigeria following the first military coup of January 15th, 1966. The man, Victor Banjo, would eventually find himself in Eastern Nigeria during the Nigerian civil war. He sought to bring a quick end to the war and to reduce the loss of lives to a minimum. In the process, his own life was cut short.

September 24, 2017 marked fifty years since the untimely death of Victor Banjo. This book tells the story of the final twenty months of the life of this gallant officer and recalls the ideals he lived for. Fifty years on, those ideals still beckon.

In the heat of several issues that confront present day Nigeria – a generation that knows little about the travails of the past – those ideals are a likely solution. Victor Banjo provides a correct reading of the Nigerian story and holds out a hope for the purging of souls and the healing of the wounds of history.

It is an acknowledged fact that the free flow of ideas and the capacity to shine a powerful light of accountability on Government and Business is the foundation of sustainable social and economic development. In addition, the ability of a people to take charge of their own stories and narratives is also critical in promoting values and the consensus needed to build a shared identity which is necessary for nation building.

"No show boating, no self-announcement. It was one hell of a decent program in an age of indecent politics in Nigeria!" - Dapo Olorunyomi, Founder and Publisher of Premium Times

"The Program drew both subject and viewer in enough to drop their guard and thus get to the kernel of the truth!" - Yusuf Tuggar, Nigeria's Ambassador to Germany

The TV program 'Straight Talk with Kadaria' (STWK) was born out of a need to firmly establish a strong national and international voice from our very own journalistic talent pool and uniquely Nigerian viewpoint.

50 Voices captures the often loud and feisty essence of STWK which ran from 2014 to 2015 and was broadcast around the world on multiple channels. We hope you enjoy the quintessentially Nigerian insights from these varied and very authentic voices.

Ministering Justice is part road map and part memoir. The book covers amongst others a treatise of the evolution of the Office of the Attorney General in Nigeria; it recommends both new angles to justice sector reform as well as appropriate measures for effective justice sector administration. It is an excellent record of several reform initiatives while also containing the pioneering intervention by the State Law Reform Commission.

Chinyere is excited when her aunty Chinwe comes to take her to Abuja to work for a rich family, who have also promised to send her to school. However, six months later, she's still out of school and it looks like her emotionally unstable and needy Madam, Osinachi, has no plans on changing that. After a weird but special encounter with her Oga, Donald, Chinyere feels bold enough to bring up the issue with him, so that she can go to school like her mates. However, Osinachi's suspicions about the pair is awakened when Donald insists that Osinachi gets a nanny, so that Chinyere will have more time for her studies. Osinachi is determined to find out their secret, but is not ready for the other secrets that will be exposed, which threaten to destroy everything she has worked so hard to build...

showcase that in his story.

The Return of Half-Something captures the happily-ever-after love story between Emmanuel – whose father is Nigerian, and mother is American – and Rebecca from a prominent family of conservative Jewish background. The conflicts in the novel are enormous and the reader is allowed to have a feel of the various degrees of clashes and oppositions clawing at each other for dominance. Firstly, Emmanuel has to win the love of his life Rebecca by going through some of the most unbelievable means to gain access to her [heart]. Then, he has to struggle to win her parents over and earn her obstinate father's blessings. Like it is not enough struggle, Emmanuel has to struggle with his convictions whether to believe his father's prophesy about him and return to his native Umuati or negate it and live the rest of his life in the flashy streets of New York. Then the conflict between the past and the present, the modern and the old, between roots and identity, all finding space here and there in the narrative and the characters have to duly reconcile to.

Esi is a feisty half-Nigerian girl growing up in Ghana, with occasional visits to her maternal family in Lagos. When her curiosity about her body leads to a ginger-in-the-vagina punishment from her stepmother, Esi begins to question the hypocrisy of the adults around her and the restrictions they place on girls.

Moving between Ghana and Nigeria, this is a heart-warming story of a girl beating a path to self-actualisation amidst political upheaval in Rawlings' Ghana and strained relations between her ancestral countries.

Emeka and Barbara had met before but only briefly. When they ran into each other again eight years later and married, Emeka felt he had married the loveliest and most dependable woman, until an unexpected incident sowed doubts that threatened the very fabric of their marriage.

Latent error is touching story of love ideals and individuality versus the more imperfect facts of actual life. It centres on conservative principles of its main character, Emeka Obiora, and how these survive within modern life, having first to deal with the slyness of his friend and housemate Mickey and then with the question of paternity - what is more important, the bloodline or real personal attachment? This allows an affecting discussion of the nature of the bonds between human beings.

Politics as Dashed Hopes in Nigeria reveals the inner workings of the CPC and the intriguing drama that unfolded within its inner caucus, particularly the Octopus-like position of some influential members of The Board of Trustees (BoT) in anointing governorship candidates for the Party in many States. The author's grasp and handling of the roles of the dramatis personae in the entire process leading to the formation of the Party, the emergence of the National and State Interim leaderships, the struggle for the control of the Party's machinery in Kano and other States, the fractured and inconclusive primaries and the general elections are quite stimulating and informative. The roles of money and regulatory institutions in the apparent manipulation of the electoral process became quite glaring both before and during the Party's primaries in Kano and are constant reminders that Nigerian politics had still got a long way to go in the practice of democracy. The near absence of internal democracy within the CPC – just as in several other political parties in Nigeria – greatly hampers the emergence of free level ground and the thriving of genuine democracy in the country. The idea of the existence of a cult-figure in Nigerian politics versus the concept of due process in political party administration is therefore an issue of paramount interest to this book. The politics of the formation of the APC leading to the emergence of General Muhammadu Buhari as the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, his achievements and challenges in the first two years of his administration are also reflected in the narrative.
