“In the late 1920s, an 11-year-old Fulani girl was kidnapped from a village in the north-eastern part of Nigeria and handed over to a British colonial officer, who kept her as a sex slave. His abandonment of her and return to his country turned her into the willing consort of yet another white man, the famous Dr. Rupert M. East, who is regarded as the father of contemporary Hausa literature. Their unusual union was a turning point in her life. This book recounts, in her own words, the incredible story of Maimunatu Dadasare Abdullahi. In it, she narrates those dark days, especially the hurdles she scaled as a pioneer participant in some of the events that shaped the emerging Northern Nigeria – colonial rule, nursing, adult education, journalism and women’s empowerment. The introduction and afterword by Dr. Aliyah Adamu Ahmad, a leading literary historian, are an invaluable addition to the tragic story, especially the agony that capped Dadasare’s sterling accomplishments.”

This is a book everyone concerned about the origin of Nigeria and why we are where we are today, as well as humanity in general, would like to read.

The family, the community, and society seem to have abandoned their responsibilities to ensure strong educational foundation for their children. Governments driven by politics of self-interest are fostering the fall of educational standards. Regular regressive results in examinations have become the order of the day in an environment of paucity of trained teachers, and where mathematics and science teachers are scanty. There is the consequent prevalent unemployment situation in the nation. This book identifies the need for an urgent review of the National Policy on Education to take care of these deficiencies, and provide for a purpose-driven system of education.

The book points out that appropriate curricula and syllabi are potent instruments for achieving the goals of education to develop desirable citizenry. It draws attention to the facts, significance, and the realities of educational development in Nigeria as vital for progressive national transformation.

“It’s a factual text with a tinge of fictional flair, a penetrable literature punctuated with humor and sarcasm, an inspiring work designed to encourage and lift the spirit of those who feel dejected, an outpouring of genuine sentiments truly deserving of attention, a dependable companion for the family, the student, the youth, and especially the woman and the man, and an inspiration to the efforts of international organizations and nongovernmental organizations [NGOs]. I have gone through the manuscript, and it made good reading. I believe this will be another knockout. Good luck” (Professor Ethel-Dorris Umeh, Enugu State University of Technology, ESUT).

How do you feel as a super cop, when, after convincingly, implicating a murderer during a lengthy investigation, the criminal walks out free, thanks to a smart attorney? The pains are too excruciating to bear. For all his diligence in unravelling the killer of Monica Ibenda, the loose wife of John Ibenda, the hangman-bag of bones, the loopholes in our Criminal Justice System of Alfador (the biggest country in Africa) is exploited by Barrister Nat in George Nnamani’s thriller, Guilty with Reason, to free the culprit, Josh Metu.

The Idahosa We Know is a book of testimonies, an x-ray of prophesies fulfilled in the lives of those who believed in the ministry of Archbishop Benson Idahosa, and the secrets and dynamics of faith. It chronicles the life and times of the archbishop from the perspectives of those who walked closely with him. The book is a noble effort aimed at reconstructing the Idahosa discourse with a view to setting the record straight and putting history in proper perspective for the present and future generations is highly commendable. The various insights and sentiments shared by some of the most respected ministers of the gospel and scholars of our time constitute a testimonial of the impactful life of the apostle of faith.
