Bamanga Tukur success at the Ports brought him to prominence. He had learnt a lot from his two decades of experience at the Nigerian Ports Authority. He learnt more about Leadership, the economy, both theory and practice; business theory and principles; commerce and industry and all these set him off into a new life trajectory, from public service life to private sector life and service. He became fully involved with, participated in and later led The African Business Round Table (ABR) and The New Partnership for African Development (NEPAD). He was also involved in promoting the importance and the crucial role Private Sector can play in driving the success of the economy. He became a versatile business and economic promoter by the many cogent business speeches he made at many businesses fora around the world; at the United Nation in New York (USA); in Durban (South Africa); Dakar (Senegal); and Abuja (Nigeria). More of these speeches could be found in the book.

There is a zest for life, a capacity for learning and a deeply curious sensibility in the writings of Titi Kushimo. In this book, Not A Perfect Story, she renders an account of what it means to come of age in Nigeria as a woman. This is a generous offering of relatable personal experiences, Kushimo has succeeded in painting a chronicle of different life phenomena, that is the lived reality of many women and girls in the global South. Not a Perfect Story is a reminiscence of real life experiences that is bound to stir one's imagination.

Olayinka – The Rebirth is the survival true-life story of the turbulent journey of a vibrant young lady. As a teenager, she endured bullying, low self-esteem, peer pressure, and the struggle to fit into societal molds.

In her undergraduate years, she experienced her first heartbreak from her first lover and another from her spiritual leaders. Then she got married and went through another 6years of deep-cutting emotional trauma that exhausted her spiritually, emotionally, and mentally. She almost gave up on God and on herself. Then her Divorce happened! But Abba who never leaves his own children showed up and surrounded her with an unusual dimension of support system so much she found herself back in God in no time. Right now, she is on a journey of liberating anyone who has gone through or going through what she has and helping to preserve the next generation from experiencing such trauma.

Olayinká – The Rebirth is the story of a clipped butterfly who found her wings again.

Renewable Energy and Rural Electrification in Nigeria: Law. Policy. Institutions /

Projected by the United Nations to become one of the six most populous nations in the world by 2050, Nigeria is home to the largest share of Sub-Saharan Africa's millions of unelectrified population. Nigeria's liberalised electricity sector rests on a decentralised governance structure embedded in law and policy. The top-down approach in practice, however, creates opportunities for more participation and deployment of decentralised renewable energy options.

The book has three main parts, offering a comprehensive overview of the renewable energy and rural electrification landscape in Nigeria. The first explores conceptual frameworks underpinning universal access to electricity and the emerging discourse in the global development agenda. The second presents critical analyses of legislation, policies, and institutional roles in the sector. The third contains lessons from cross-jurisdictional models and practices, and the approaches to technology and governance that have delivered varied results elsewhere.

Anyone seeking comprehensive understanding of both concept and practice of renewable energy and rural electrification in Nigeria, multidisciplinary practitioners who want in-depth analyses of relevant laws and policies, and researchers and students looking to advance the frontiers of the subject will find the book an indispensable resource.

This book is sectioned into three parts for easy understanding of the interrelationships between the various events. Section 1 talks of the Ekitiparapo War with the various roving battles fought from 1877 till the signing of treaties in 1886 and the final war cessation in 1893. Section 2 discusses Fabunmi and his post-war activities, and the final section deals with the 20th Century events that ushered in drastic changes to the belief system and development of the people. It gives great insights into the dramas that surrounded the advent of Islam and Christianity as well as the incursion of European education into Okemesi. All these are tied together in the courage and the conviction displayed in achieving the goals by the main players.

The Curse of Berlin: Africa After the Cold War / Adekeye Adebajo

London, UK: C. Hurst & Co. (Publishers) Ltd, 2010

xxxiv, 414p.

Includes Index

9781849040969

$ 50.00 / PB

At the 1884-1885 Conference of Berlin a cartel of largely European states effectively set the rules for the partition of Africa, an event whose historical and structural importance continues to affect and shape Africa's contemporary international relations. This 'Curse' is a recurring theme in Adebajo's trenchant historical analysis, even though its main focus is on contemporary African issues after the Cold War. The first part of the book examines Africa's quest for security with three essays on Africa's security institutions such as the African Union and sub-regional bodies; another on the political, peacekeeping, and socio-economic roles of the United Nations (UN) in Africa; and a third on Africa's two UN Secretaries-General between 1992 and 2006: Egypt's Boutros Boutros-Ghali and Ghana's Kofi Annan. The second section of the book focuses on Africa's quest for leadership, and five chapters examine the hegemonic roles of South Africa, Nigeria, the United States, China and France on the continent. The five chapters in the final section of the study analyse Africa's quest for unity, and examine the roles and significance for Africa of six historical figures: Mandela, Mbeki, Kwame Cecil Rhodes, Obama, and Gandhi; as well as assessing the African Union and the EU in comparative perspective.

When a gang of armed robbers decided to undertake the biggest bank robbery in Nigeria, they were convinced their plan was failproof, and it was. In less than fifteen minutes, they had taken possession of millions of naira in cash from a branch of, arguably, Nigeria's biggest bank. But the robbery took an unexpected turn when the robbers saw a photographer taking pictures of the operation from across the street. Knowing the danger that the pictures pose, the gang went after the camera and in the process got caught up with the police in a shootout, although they eventually escaped. In the commotion that ensued after the shootout, the camera was misplaced, creating a frenetic manhunt by the police, the robbers and the photographer. With the entire country closely following the unfolding drama created by the robbery, all eyes turned to CSP Olabisi Ilesanmi - the Divisional Police Officer in charge, whose embattled wife, it was found out, had been seeing one of the robbery suspects secretly. As if his job could not get any harder, not every officer working with CSP Ilesanmi on the robbery, wanted the identities of the robbers be revealed. Will the camera be found? Who will find it? Find out the answers to these questions in The Evidence - a fast paced thriller that ushers a new boost of adrenaline with the turn of each page.

This is a fictional story based on true life story. With a sizeable land mass with the rising sun from the East of the black continent, the Sabundan territory paraded some of the best climatic conditions anywhere. The gradual but certain development of the people's natural and more effective patterns of agreeable integration was rudely arrested by a foreign colonial power (The advent of a white colonial power in the early twentieth century). It was an unlikely cocktail which they had put together. The Sabundan Air Force bombed Harbor City in the south of Zanda with fatal consequences. The battle line had been drawn and joined as the Zandan Times broadsheet screamed in its headline, "The Soul of Sabunda Is Dead."

Two boys venture into a nearby forest, to hunt for bats and cook their prey over an open fire. Within a month, they are dead, bodies ravaged by an insidious disease. Compounding the family's grief, experts warn against touching the sick. But this caution comes too late: the virus spreads rapidly.

In a series of moving snapshots, Véronique Tadjó illustrates the terrible extent of the West African Ebola epidemic of 2014, through the eyes of those affected in myriad ways: the doctor who tirelessly treats patients day after day in a sweltering tent; the student who volunteers to work as a gravedigger while universities are closed; the grandmother who agrees to take in an orphaned boy cast out of his village. And watching over them all is the ancient and wise Baobab tree, mourning the dire state of the earth yet providing a sense of hope for the future.

Acutely relevant to our times in light of the coronavirus pandemic, In the Company of Men explores critical questions about how we cope with a global crisis and how we can combat fear and prejudice.

978307869

$ 70.00 / PB

In this book, J. Isawa Elaigwu, a professor Emeritus of political Science, reflects on Nigeria's painful process of political development. He argues that "the past has lessons for today" as Nigeria "forges a new future for our children". He strongly makes a case for a country with bright and prosperous future. However, he is legalistic enough to warn that this can only take place if Nigerians take their destiny into their hands and out their 'act' together. Dr. Elaigwu believes that, in this process of national rebirth, Nigerians must critically appreciate the past, constructively participate in the present, as they lay the foundations for tomorrow.

"The Ethical Dilemma - Charting a bold and new path for ethics and values in Nigeria." The book traces the history of Nigeria's ethical challenges from 1959 to the present date, and recommends that an Agency be established under the Office of the President with a mandate to monitor and recommend corrective steps for unethical behavior in both public and private establishments. In this timely and apt book, the author travels down memory lane to draw on key aspects of the turbulent history of the geographical expression called Nigeria to attempt an analytical description of the malady he aptly calls Nigeria's ethical dilemma. To broach a subject whose scope is as expansive as the culture and ethnicity of Nigeria is diverse, the author has ingeniously sought safety in the 1999 constitutionally-prescribed seven National Ethics of Discipline, Integrity, Dignity of Labour, Social Justice, Religious Tolerance, Self-Reliance and Patriotism; in a rare literary excursion into the complex subject of ethics and values in Nigeria. Unequivocally qualified to intellectually profess on this subject, having over the past decade earned the sobriquet, 'The Apostle of Ethics, ' Tajudeen Toyin-Oke has acquitted himself creditably by engaging in a sound and lucid analysis of the underlying factors responsible for the decline in ethics and values in Nigeria. He draws from his own rich personal and professional experience to tell this less than savory side of Nigeria's story. The author, in recommending a brutally-frank national self-audit, while remaining optimistic for a glorious future, suggests that, Nigeria, in holding onto methods that are a mere relic of a mixed glorious and inglorious past, needs to courageously accept that even traditions can be remade anew so that a people can step out of their 'comfort zone, ' and into a new and vibrant era of genuine growth and development. He concludes that, in this season, Nigeria needs leaders who are strategic in thinking and deliberate in deed, and who are committed to working with the best interests of the people they lead in mind, and that a remarkable transformation cannot be achieved without a fundamental shift in our long-held paradigms, and most importantly, an ethical revolution. It is that ethical revolution that has been the author's avowed and passionate quest over the past one decade.

Women and Leadership in Igboland: Omoku, Ime Chi and Omugwo Institutions / T. Akachi Ezeigbo

Lekki, Lagos State: Purple Shelves Publishers, 2021

9789789878710

$ 30.00/ PB

92gm.

In this monograph, the author examines women's leadership roles in three spheres of influence under women's control: Omoku, Ime Chi and Omugwo institutions and argues that there were a variety of leadership opportunities open to Igbo women in the past – some of them still exist today and will continue to exist in the years to come – through which they exerted and can still exert their influence to ensure the well-being of their families and communities.

With Women and Leadership in Igboland: Omoku, Ime Chi and Omugwo Institutions, the author empowers women with the knowledge that, like their foremothers, they have a right to hold leadership positions not only in the home but also in the workplace and public space.

In this timely and relevant book, Flight Lieutenant Anthonia Egbujiobi presents facts and figures from her detailed research on curbing insecurity and calls for co-operation between the military and civilians as the way to combating insecurity. The book also suggests how this collaboration can and should be achieved. She was inspired to author this book when she was nominated by the United Nations to serve in Congo as a military observer. Her experiences about the programmes and empowerment schemes she conducted in Congo - which earned her a recognition and award by the UN and Nigerian Air Force - with the peoples and communities where she served are documented in her first book titled, Building Castles With Pebbles.

The book which was a foreword by The Founder/CEO of Cable Newspaper, Simon Kolawole, has 10 chapters that harped on the imperative of visioning, leadership, youth participation, and active citizenship.

In the book, it is my argument that Nigeria has struggled with development over the years because of the absence of a national vision, which I described as the minimal and irreducible promise of the government to its people. I have proposed three planks (prosperity, protection, and liberty), upon which to interrogate Nigeria's past, strategize in the present and launch forward into the future. Prosperity – investment in the productive capacities of the people, Protection – lives must matter, Liberty – government's commitment to guarantee all rights.

It is my conviction that for Nigerians to have a connection with the country, beyond their certificate of birth, ancestry, and origin, it must first be about a promise that guarantees citizens prosperity, protection, and liberty. The book also goes further to locate the youth agenda, describing vision as the purview of young people.
