[An elusive in its explanation as the power of prophecy, feng shui is the spiritual magnetic field that binds our universe, distinguishing good from ill, peace from turmoil, governing the balance in the very elements of harmony itself. Understanding it is beyond the capacity of most laymen. Not crediting it is like not believing in the inevitability of spring replacing winter.]

[As their cities grew, the ever inward – Looking Japanese retreated to worlds within worlds, transforming their homes into sanctuaries of retreat. Centuries of subjection to earthquake, typhoon and fire obliged the Japanese to live lightly but exquisitely, with few but superbly crafted tansus (furnishings) often serving secondary functions. Folding screens and sliding rice-paper doors enclosed jeweled temples of the inner self.]

The Ohel Leah synagogue : Hong Kong Its history and conservation / Katrina Mc Dougall and Bruce Pettman
Hong Kong : Jewish Historical Society of Hong Kong, c2000
109 p.: ill.; 29cm.
962-85339-2-4
$ 55.00

[The Ohel Leah synagogue was constructed in 1901 for the Sephardic Jewish community of Hong Kong. It was designed by the Hong Kong architectural firm of Leigh and orange and has served as a place of worship for orthodox jews since its construction.

The conservation and retoration of the Ohel Leah Synagogue to its pristine condition illustrates the efforts of a cultural congregation to preserve its heritage as represented by its place of worship. The restoration of this building demonstrates how heritage conservation not only preserves the cultural life of a community but can also inspire a renewed sense of pride among its members. The building has retained its original use as well as scrupulously maintained the original design of the structure a design which has both symbolic connotations and historic associations. The quality of the restoration work, which has been carried out to the highest international standard, ensures that the historic Ohel Leah Synagogue will continue to serve the community well as a living symbol of the city's diversity and vitality.]

True to Form : A Celebration of the Art of the Chinese Craftsman / Lynn Pan
Hong Kong : FormAsia Books Limited, c2001
151 p.; ill.; 19cm.
962-7283-42-8
$ 19.50

[Down through the centuries Chinese craftsmen have worked with clay, wood, bamboo, paper, cloth, stone and even gourd to bring humble utilitarian objects to the level of art.

The appeal of these objects to the collector – whether birdcage or basket, box or brushpot, plate or bowl, comb or pipe, shadow Puppet or wood block print – transcends simple nostalgia, lying as it does in their intrinsic beauty and vitality as much as in the fact that, transmitted from father to son, the skills with which they have been so finely wrought are in danger of perishing.

This lavish collection of photographs, richer and more eclectic in examples than have ever been gathered between the covers of a single book before, celebrates the art of the Chinese craftsman.]

[Its symmetry so delights the eye that classic Chinese furniture – whether genuine Ming dynasty masterpieces or well made reproductions – possesses a timeless quality that ensures it can never go out of fashion. Today it is enjoying a heightened revival of interest, both in Asia and the West. This volume celebrates the unique design and craftsmanship of Chinese furniture in the context of the evolving tastes of different generations of collectors.

It explains why choice household objects, ranging from cabinets to canopy beds, are as much a delight to behold as to use. An abundance of superb photographs illustrates a breathtaking resplendence of armchairs, beds, screens and wardrobes, making this book in itself a collector's item for those who treasure style and grace in their homes.]

[Bewjewelled women, embroidered robes, hairpins inlaid with kingfisher feathers, and delicately painted fans conjure up a lost world of the rich elite of imperial China. This was a world of spacious mansions and gardens, of high-ranking officials and wealthy landlords, of their virtuous and accomplished wives and daughters, and of a domestic life conducted with decorum and taste. Adorning the empress tells another story : for the women of the elite, no less than for those in peasant homes, bound feet and a strict social code kept them confined within their imprisoning courtyards. Theirs was a world as much of cruelty and sorrow as of grandeur and luxury.]

[The Japanese cherish the exquisite in all things. They lavish elegance and refinement not only on the products of their artistry but on the very tools that conjure them into existence. Before qualifying as a carpenter during the Edo Period, an apprentice had to make his own tools. The dedication and care that went into their creation was regarded as the measure of his skill. The Takenaka Carpentry Tools Museum in Kobe houses a treasure trove of this long and proud tradition.]

Masculinities and HongKong Cinema / Edited by Laikwan Pang and Day Wong
Hong Kong : Hong Kong University Press, c2005
xi, 342 p.: ill.; 23cm.
Includes Bibliography and Index
962-209-738-3
$ 26.00

[This collection of exciting essays explores how the representations and the ideologies a masculinities can be productively studies in the context of Hong Kong cinema. It has two objectives: first, to investigate the multiple meanings and manifestations of masculinities in Hong Kong cinema that compliment and contradict each other. Second, to analyze the social and cultural environments that make these representations possible and problematic. Masculinities and Hong Kong Cinema presents a comprehensive picture of how Hong Kong mainstream cinematic masculinities are produced within their own socio-cultural discourses, and how these masculinities are distributed, received and transformed with the setting of the market place. ] viii, 220 p. : ill. ; 23cm.

Includes Index
962-209-723-5
$ 33.50

[The book deals with a topic of perennial interest to Chinese and non-Chinese alike : Chinese food. Chinese culture is exceptionally food-oriented, and non-Chinese are curious about what Chinese people in China actually eat, as contrasted with meals in ever-popular Chinese restaurants. Furthermore, foreigners have long received the impression that Chinese people are inadequately fed, but the picture today is considerably more complex. At its best, the Chinese diet is among the world's healthiest, and access to adequate, nutritious food has made enormous progress in recent years. The context of the Chinese diet and its nutritional adequacy vary over space, not only in the vastness of China but even within one province. All these strands, examined after the end of food rationing opened new choices to Chinese consumers, are portrayed in a text that is easily accessible to the general public and that is supplemented with maps, graphs, and photographs.]

[This volume, emerging from a cross-national study of teachers' perception of good citizenship, aims to fill this significant gap. The chapters here ask two fundamental questions. What do teachers see as important in citizenship education? How do these perceptions facilitate or hinder the preparation of good citizens? While providing rich and useful data on the latest developments of citizenship education in various contexts, this book also offers an all-round review of concepts arguments on the subject, as well as insightful comparative analyses of the findings emerged from the case studies. One encouraging conclusion drawn from these studies is that teachers across nations share similar goals and objectives that seem to have transcended cultural and political boundaries.]

[This book is about the ecology of freshwater and terrestrial habitats in Hong Kong. It is intended for those who want to know more about our forests, streams, shrublands and grasslands, and about the animals that live in them. It is the direct descendant of our earlier (1994) and shorter book, Hills and Streams: An ecology of Hong Kong, and incorporates what we and others have learned about the Hong Kong countryside over the last ten years. The urban and agricultural lowlands are omitted, because the ecology of these highly managed areas is fundamentally different from that of the semi-natural uplands that we have written about.]

Shaping the Ideal Child : Children and their Primers in Late Imperial China / Limin Bai
Hong Kong : The Chinese University Press, c2005
xxiv, 311 p.; 24cm.
Includes Index.
$ 42.00

[Shaping the ideal Child examines traditional Chinese literacy primers in the context of intellectual involvement in child education in China from the tenth century to the late nineteenth century. Based on solid research, it analyses the history and contents of the primers, investigating how Chinese children in pre-modern times learned to read and write, and what they studied apart from the Confucian classics. It goes on to probe the unique characteristics of the traditional Chinese Pedagogical approach to children, and the substantial differences in the education provided for children of the gentry and those of the peasantry. Examining the motivation of some of the authors of these primers, who were also Confucian scholars, the book points to a close link between elite conceptions of children and Confucian attempts to construct an ideal society through child education. It thus provides a new perspective on traditional Chinese society and culture that is very relevant to our understanding of education in China today.]

$ 26.00

[This is an autobiography of a woman of unusual strength and determination who grew up in 1930s Shanghai. Born to a traditional family of China's scholar official class, she endured incredible suffering as her country was torn apart, first by warlords and later by the invading Japanese imperial army. Initially she was given a Western education and, as a teenager, was sought after as a singer of Chinese opera, socializing with tycoons, military officers and statesmen. One of her closet friends was her father's concubine. She witnessed life in the raw in Shanghai as warlordism tore the country apart. When Japan attacked Shanghai, she and her young family took refuge in Hong Kong until Hong Kong too was occupied by the Japanese Imperial Army.]

[This major new history of Hong Kong tells the remarkable story of how a cluster of remote fishing villages grew into an icon of capitalism. The story began in 1842 with the founding of the Crown Colony after the First Anglo-Chinese war-the original 'Opium War'. As premier power in Europe and an expansionist empire, Britain first created in Hong Kong a major naval station and the principal base to open the Celestial Chinese Empire to trade. Working in parallel with the locals, the British built it up to become a focus for investment in the region and an international centre with global shipping, banking and financial interests.]

Chinese Americans – California – Los Angeles – Social Conditions – History

Chinese Americans – California – Los Angeles – Economic Conditions

$ 40.00

[This unprecedented pictorial history book presents the vibrant and diverse contribution of the 150 years of Chinese Americans in Los Angeles. The author worked with researchers and historians to document this remarkable history and to trace more than 200 vintage photographs, drawings and paintings depicting the struggle for making America their home. This special chronicle features a bilingual (English and Chinese) summarization of each major period of the Chinese – American experience.

Chinese Americans are the only ethnic group in the U.S. to have ever been barred from entering the country by an onerous federal immigration law lasting 61 years. They were being denied the most basic privileges, including the right to own property, to testify in court against Caucasians and to become citizens. The gradual attainment of civil rights took nearly a century.

Today, we find many Chinese Americans indistinguishable from other Americans having attained great success. But many have retained aspects of their ethnic identities, and new immigrants are entering society with different cultural perspectives. They continue to make significant contributions to numerous areas of life from science and technology, to business, to the arts and politics. This spectacular book is a keepsake for every family which will be cherished for years to come.]

[A link running through many of the essays in this volume is between evolutionary biology and Chinese ethics. Since the 1960s and 1970s, within the fields of biology, psychology, and neurology are findings that advance our knowledge of how the mind functions, with special attention to social behavior. Donald Munro's focus is on what this development means, narrowly, for the study of Confucian ethics, and broadly, for Chinese contributions to any international discussion of moral topics. The evolutionary scientists coverage with mainstream Confucians in affirming the existence of universal human social traits. There is a human nature. They also share some important positions on the content of that nature. The topic is inborn social tendencies that may predispose, but do not by themselves determine, actual behavior.]

[Once a forgotten base for fisherfolk and pirates on the outer fringe of imperial China, Hong Kong became one of the spoils of the notorious opium wars – and was transformed into one of the glittering prizes of Britain’s expanding empire. Soon after its founding in the 1840s adventuresome British merchant princes, Chinese compradors, Armenian entrepreneurs and Parsee traders were rigging sails and heading for its craggy shores. They brought with them a spirit of enterprise, aggressive energy, and visionary skills and the entreport quickly spun itself a web of trade- and a deserving reputation for innovation and survival. Hong Kong has won itself an international status that belies its size.]

[To the Chinese Scholar, the preparation for recording his thought was an important as the execution. On his desk lay the four Treasures, the symbols of his calling : paper, brushes, inkslab and Ink, so arranged as to inspire the best of his talent. His finely ground and watered ink was the medium for transmitting his message, his brush the conduit through which his spirit flowed on to carefully chosen paper. Calligraphy in China ranked on a par with painting and poetry, as hallmarks of a man of accomplishment and discriminating taste. From an examination of his desk, and what was arranged upon it, one might gauge the measure of the man. Here one found, in microcosm, a treasury of the finely wrought implements that had given expression to one of the world’s greatest civilizations. This book takes the reader into the scholar’s study and seats him at that desk.]

[Today, Millions of Chinese revere Sun Yat-Sen as 'Father of the nation'. Although he spent the better part of his life outside of China, much of it as a peripatetic wanderer, no one was more single-mindedly devoted to the cause of a free and modern China than this missionary - educated son of Chinese peasants. Despite repeated failures and disappointment, Sun refused to abandon his vision of a Chinese revolution. Of all modern China's leaders, none is more of an enigma than Sun Yat-Sen. In these pages he emerges as a sometimes tragic but most often courageous and many-sided figure. Knowing him, one knows more of modern-day China with all its conflicts, paradoxes and visions of a stable future.]

[The forbidden city was the residence of 23 emperors of China for nearly five hundred years. As such, it witnessed many of the most significant public events influencing the course of Chinese history. But it is as a secret world, a place of alleyways and hidden turnings, of closed gates and private courtyards, that the Forbidden City has continued to exert such an extraordinary hold on the modern imagination.

This book looks at the great Within (Da Nei) Forbidden to all but the concubines and maidservants and eunuchs that served the Son of Heaven and his family. The mysterious intrigues and dramas and backstage conspiracies that took place within these walls culminated in the legendary reign of the empress dowager Cixi, the decline into decadence of the imperial court and the ultimate fall of the Qing dynasty.]

[This book spans a turbulent century of encounter that began when foreign merchants and missionaries first secured a tenuous foothold in China in the 1840s, and ends when China again retreated into self – imposed isolation following the birth of the People’s Republic in 1949.

It was a century that produced a cavalcade of unforgettable characters that could well have been the inventions of fiction – the concubine who rose to power in the forbidden city and the dapper Irishman who was her supporter and the doyen of Peking’s diplomatic community; the merchant princes who made fortunes by smuggling opium; the high-minded mandarins who triggered the notorious opium War, and finally the revolutionaries whose spirit fuelled the birth of 20th century China.

Encounters with China adds a fascinating historical perspective to China’s continuing encounters with the West.]

[In 2003 more than 500,000 people marched in Hong Kong against the National Security (Legislative Provisions) bill, which would have prohibited treason, sedition, secession, and subversion against the national government of China and included new mechanisms for proscribing political organisations. This edited collection analyses that legislation, particularly the implications for civil liberties and the one country two systems model. Although the massive protest compelled the Hong Kong government to withdraw the Bill from the legislature in 2003, it will likely propose similar legislation in the future because Hong Kong has a constitutional obligation to implement Article 23 of the Basic Law. The book provides detailed and balanced commentary on the Bill, explains why certain proposals proved so controversial, and offers concrete recommendations on how to improve the proposals before the next legislative exercise.]

[Shen Congwen is one of the world's great modern writers. He is also one of the finest Chinese prose stylists of all time. Critics have attributed Shen's greatness to different factors, notably the magic of his literary language and his ability to describe beautiful and fulfilling styles of life even in materially primitive and deprived rural surroundings. At times, the author was a realist; at other times, a romantic. He wrote about Chinese village life, and he also reproduced the discourse of professors in the cities. Selected stories of Shen Congwen collects six representative and classic stories from the author's most mature period, in the 1930s and 1940s. Each piece is permeated with contradictions, particularly between the "new" and the "old" as well as the "healthy" and the "corrupt" of traditional Chinese society.]

[Renowned for his absurdist re-visioning of the world and experimentation with the techniques of humour in his writings, Lao she has written about most major historical events in modern China. In his masterpiece Camel Xiangzi, he reveals his prophetic vision of the future of China. The novel depicts the life of Xiangzi, a young rickshaw-puller in Beijing, who fails to improve his life no matter how hard he works. When innocent people's hopes are destroyed, they are awakened to the truth that they are but playthings of fate, which is a Chinese concept for the unnameable in life's absurdities. The novel demonstrates the techniques of bitter humour Lao she employs in his portrayal of characters, who are caught in the endless social turmoil in the 1930s. The novel's socio-historical dimensions have made it a widely used text for the cultural analysis of modern China.]
