This is the first book-length History of the small South-east Asian Island of Timor in the English Language.

Using an array of European language sources and archival records, Gunn takes a correlated view of the Timorese Funu or way of making war and the incursions of Outsiders. Viewed over long time, the Timor Case stands outside classic models of colonial pacification, the raising of taxes and mission Civilitric. Rather, as the book explains, Timor and the Flores-Solor archipelago served as a collection centre for seasonal trading conducted by Chinese, Macanese, Portuguese and others for Timor's highly esteemed sandalwood.

What impact has the border for people living close to it, on their identity, perception, interaction and activity spaces? How does this impact change over time? This report tells the stories of Macau people, it links the themes of life, territory and identity, and it reflects on Macao and the Zhuhai border in the wider context of the integration process.
