[This book has previously appeared in my doctoral dissertation in Korean. “ A structural analysis of Dress phenomena in Korea” (Hanyang University, 1987)
The aim of this book is to analyze the dress structures by applying the linguistic theories of F.de. Saussure, the mentalistic semantics of C.K.Ogden and I.A.Richards, and the semantics of G.Leech to dress, and systemize the actual dress behaviour resulting from wearing dress. In other words, it is to investigate the language of dress.]

Shaman Ritual Music in Korea / Lee Yong-Shik
Seoul : Jimoondang, 2004
xviii, 330 p.; 23cm.

Korean Studies Dissertation Series No. 5

[This book is written to show that Korean shaman ritual ("gut") performances, in their musical and textual structures, not only mirror the current socio-cultural situation of Korea, but also shape the processes of today's Korean culture. Although shamanism has been regarded as a marginalized peripheral cult for a long time, it has played a vital role in the process of re-creating and re-establishing Korea's national culture. The Hwanghae shaman ritual, for example, is aimed at maintaining and strengthening harmony between the human and nature, between the living and the dead, and between the human beings themselves. Since music is the core element of "gut," the harmonization during the "gut" performance relies on music for their effectiveness. Shaman music functions to enhance both religiosity and entertainment. The ushering songs contain a limited number of repeated melodic phrases with an emphasis on clear deliverance with syllabic singing accompanied by the repetition of the basic drumming pattern. The religious-musical harmonization in "gut" provides efficacy and entertainment while combining the sacred and the profane, and ritual and theater.

This ritualization of religious-musical harmony represents the cultural artifact of the Korean people, i.e. Koreanness. Major chapters of this book include: "From Central to Periphery and National Culture"; "Ritual Instruments and Ritual Performers"; "Gut: A Shaman Ritual"; "Ritual Activity"; and "Ritual Words."]

[The unique Korean line, which is referred to as "seon" is found in all genres of Korean traditional art. It is embedded in the minds of the Korean people and existed even before the creation of artworks. Seon is an integral part of the vocabulary expressing the innate "Korean-ness" of our people. This seon has always had an important place in the natural and human surroundings of the Korean people: the slope of the hills, the rounded sleeves and skirts of the hanbok, tombs, thatched-roofs and tiled roofs, and the mother's bosom. Seon was always an important element of the Korean spirit and was applied as a formal vocabulary in artistic genres. The seon found in roofs is a good example.]

[The lattice and frame are at the heart of traditional Korean window architecture. The lattice serves an ornamental function through its patterns, and its decorative quality may be either purely formative or symbolic.]

The typical lattice of Buddhist architecture is the floral lattice. Floral lattices appear to be just elaborate and decorative, but it has a profound Buddhist significance symbolizing the state of avatamsaka. On the other hand, Confucian lattices have geometric patterns which resemble the trigrams or divination signs of I Ching. The trigrams are visual representations of the workings of the universe. The resemblance between lattice patterns and trigrams refers to the conceptual and formal similarities.]

[The most distinctive characteristic of Korea's traditional architecture is the use of natural materials. This is observed in both, wood and stone the two most representative natural materials. Crooked logs are used as columns, and stone is artificially shaped as little as possible so that it remains close to its natural state.

There are two major architectural meanings of natural materials in Korea's traditional architecture: one is the aesthetic of technical artistry sees that the ultimate beauty is created when artificial character of the material. The aesthetic of temperance sees that the less we change the natural material, the more we learn to control our self-centered desires. The use of stone in architecture emphasizes the latter concept.]

[Korea's traditional space can be summed up in two words - emptiness and formlessness. They also represent the traditional mindset of the Korean people. Emptying and non-definitiveness are incorporated in teachings of Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism, and are core values of the latter two.

In traditional Korean architecture, with the exception of the royal palace, we see the idea of emptying and non-definitiveness apparent in all types of buildings built for different classes. These two characteristics are the key formal aspects evident not only in the thatched-roof houses or cottages for commoners, but also in the designs of buildings for the ruling class, such as Buddhist temples, roof - tiled residential houses called hanok, and private Confucian academies.]

[At first glance, it seems that the elaborate embellishments of Buddhist temples are inconsistent with the basic Buddhist teachings of emptiness, where all things and all laws are void. But the rich adornments of Buddhist temples, such as floral lattices and capitals, should be approached from the concept of avatamsaka, not the idea of emptiness.

The most unique characteristic of the pavilion is that there is no distinction between the inner and outer space, the ultimate purpose is to become one with nature. What makes this possible is the typology of the pavilion – a building constructed with only the structural frame and no walls. The courage to eliminate walls and to create a building with only the most basic framework would be impossible without the will to become one with nature.]

[Norigae is a decorative pendant hung from the outer or inner breast-tie of the short upper garment (jeogori), or sashes of the traditional Korean women's costume called "handbook". It was an accessory item exclusive to the Joseon dynasty and was made of precious materials such as gold, silver or jade. The decorative designs and ornamental details of norigae made it the focal point of women's apparel and created a stark contrast against the generally subdued and understated hanbok.

As hanbok established itself in the basic form of short top and long skirt, norigae also became an important ornament which complemented the short jeogori. The widespread popularity of norigaes can be attributed to the fact that it appealed to the aesthetic and emotional senses of Joseon women.]

[Anglophone Koreaphiles have long been hunting for something substantial about Korean celadon (ch'ongja) and earthenware (t'ogi). When the world thinks of Korean art, it is usually Koryo and Choson period celadon that comes to mind, and yet until now, non-academics have had little more than tourist pamphlets to guide them. The first in a five-volume series on Korean art, "Earthenware and Celadon - Handbook Of Korean Art" answers this need. While certainly not exhaustive, it will not be surpassed for years to come. Complete with ample pictures as well as descriptions of techniques, kiln sites in the country, a glossary, pattern catalogue, and more.]

[To make foreigners feel close to Korean fine art, a seemingly remote and sometimes difficult art form, appears to be a daunting task. However, in "Essential Korean Art," the author Park Young-dae succeeds in accomplishing that mission through sympathetic and entertaining portrayals of old arts. Park, also a painter himself, successfully enlivens human struggles and accomplishments of old masters, without getting lost in the technical descriptions burdensome to a layperson. The simple and lurid explanations of Buddhist and Confucian concepts make the art more understandable and meaningful. This book successfully conveys a portrait of Korean graphic art and in doing so gives the reader a feeling for Korean culture and history not found in ordinary histories. This visually attractive and interesting-to-read book is filled with stories about the artists and their milieu, and discusses the settings and techniques used in the works as well as how the art reflects the character of the artist and the artist's world.

Although the original text was intended for Korean readers, the author introduces complex aspects of Korea's culture and spirituality so clearly that foreign readers will have no difficulty understanding even if they lack any prior knowledge. Footnotes and a short glossary provide additional background. This book is composed of five parts: "Clear and Serene Light" (dealing with arts from ancient Korea to Goryeo Dynasty); "Records of Life and Dreams" (early Joseon period); "A Bright and Magnanimous Mind" (mid-Joseon period); "Charm and Taste of Joseon"; and "The Depth and Profundity of Paintings" (both later Joseon period). The lion's share of the cultural relics introduced in this book is taken by those collections by the National Museum of Korea. The book also does justice to the originality and beauty of Korean classical art, which has long been hidden in the shadows of its Chinese influence and modification by Japanese neighbors.]

[There are few fields that move faster into the future than marketing and fewer countries still that move faster into the future than Korea. Unfortunately in our mad rush forward to find competitive advantage we quickly erode the truths and the learning so readily observable in our past. Remarkable most Korean marketers today have never known from whence marketing and advertising in Korea developed and have bought into a popular myth that Korea is unique and inherently different from Western advertising and marketing.

In this book the authors not only cover current facts but also take us back to the very recent foundations of today's Korean marketing juggernaut by stripping away the worn-out stories of Korean isolation and history as a "hermit kingdom" to reveal a Korea formed by Korean's in active interplay with American and Japanese professionals.]

[Analysis of TV news is considered more urgent, Because TV plays a more significant role than newspaper as a medium for today's news reports. However, TV news reports are usually more difficult to analyze than newspaper reports because of the difficulty of analyzing pictures. Is it possible to consider TV pictures as a semiotic system, their sequence as a narrative system, and the consequence of the sequence as a syntactic system? A kinetic movement of pictures conveys meaning and bears an image as its consequence.]

News, Signs and Culture : A Semiotic Approach to Korean Media and its Ideological Meaning / Seon-gi Baek
Korea : Hanul Publishing Co., c2004

[The most important concept in semiotics is the 'sign.' Signs always exist in our life, constitute the basis of our life, and represent our consciousness and ideology. Through such a relation, 'signs' reflect or indicate human life itself. Accordingly, in addition to 'signs', other major required concepts are 'meaning' 'consciousness,' ideology,' and so on. As signs do not produce meaning on their own but give rise to meaning in relations with society, they are deeply concerned with various social practices, customs, laws, and cultures. Thus, a science, semiotics, comes to duly take its place as part of social sciences. Through this book I examine the implicative relations between the newspapers and society, by analyzing the attitude towards news coverage with semiotic methods.]

[In this study, we attempted to outline the "fused-market" paradigm for North East Asian Countries, with special reference to Korea. Conceptually this paradigm consists of the positive aspects of both western and eastern cultures. From western values, it adopts the ideas of free choice of individual for scientific rationality in terms of technological, enlightenment and innovation in production, all of which lead to the development of civilization along with a functioning free market system, which further foster the value of substance in terms of philosophy. From the East, it cherishes Confucian virtues such as "Jen" (benevolence), or caring for others, as well as, "Jung Yong", the philosophy of the mean. One can see in this middle ground a beneficial value for achieving harmony in markets, whereby actions tilted toward self-interest can be mitigated via the acceptance of the mean values inclined toward altruism, humanity and, communitarian equality.]

[The Korean Nation was formed over a long period as ethnic groups migrated and interacted with each other in and around Manchuria and the Korean Peninsula. This is why Koreans constitute one of the oldest people in Asia and pride themselves of a long tradition and rich cultural heritage. As a peninsular state, Korea has both continental and oceanic characteristics. Its culture is a unique amalgamation of foreign influences, as its geographical location constantly exposed it to contacts with not only China, but with countries to the north, south and west of China as well.

In ancient times, Korea was a power in East Asia and once ruled much of Manchuria. The kingdom of Goguryeo was successful in repelling the aggression of China's Sui Dynasty and Tang Dynasty, while the kingdom of Balhae ruled over a vast territory extending to the north as far as Siberia (Russian Maritime Territory). Throughout history, Korea not only developed a culture that is unique and distinguished from that of China, but also transmitted many elements of its culture to Japan.]

[This volume consists of four parts and appendices: Part 1 presents Dr. Jaisohn's recollection of his early life in Korea, with emphasis on his role in the abortive coup of 1884 and the Independence Club movement of 1896-1898.

Part II is a collection of articles and documents which he wrote to promote the cause of Korean independence between 1919 and 1922, when he served as Director of the Korean Information Bureau in Philadelphia.

Part III contains his serialized political commentaries on the Sino-Japanese conflict from 1937 to 1940, which appeared in The New Korea, a Korean newspaper published in Los Angeles. Part IV is a collection of the texts of radio broadcasts he directed to his compatriots during his short stay in Seoul as Special Korean Counselor to Gen. John R. Hodge, the commander of the United States occupation forces in Korea, from July 1947 to September 1948.

Dr. Jaisohn was the first Korean to earn a medical degree from an American university, after having received thorough training in classical Chinese literature in Korea, modern military arts in Japan, and humanities in the United States. Reflected in this volume is his patriotic appeal to the Korean people to rebuild Korea as a modern nation based on the principles of democracy and Christianity, after having suffered at the hands of the authoritarian rulers of the old Choson dynasty and the Japanese colonial government. Readers will be impressed by Dr. Jaisohn's perspicacious comments on world civilization, history, international relations, political philosophy, economics, and religion, in addition to medical science of which he possessed professional expertise, and by his mastery of the English language.

This volume not only is a sine qua non to historians interested in the late nineteenth-century Korean reform movement and the post-1919 independence movement, but also an insightful guide to social scientists and humanists who search for the roots of modern political thought in Korea.]

[Long out of print, Korean Boats and Ships opens a door on a part of Korea never well known and now almost vanished. This comprehensive introduction to traditional Korean vessels, written just as the impact of modernization was beginning the process that was to sweep them from the seas, summaries the various types and their construction, telling something of the rites and customs associated with them, and goes on to an outline of Korean nautical history. There is a full section on Admiral Yi Sun Sin, Which makes the first analysis of the Turtle Boat and Adm. Yi's tactics from a seaman's perspective. An interesting appendix is Dr. L.G. Paik's translation of a Chinese report on Korean boats, written in the 12th century.]

[Previous studies of the origins of the Korean War have explained the outbreak of conventional fighting by focusing on the events of the weeks and months just prior to June 25, 1950. Bruce Cummings maintains, to the contrary, that its origins must be sought in the five-year period preceding the war, when Korea was dominated by widespread demands for political, economic, and social change. Making extensive use of Korean language materials from North and South, and of heretofore classified documents, intelligence reports, and U.S. military government sources, the author first examines the background and setting of postwar Korean politics and the arrival of American and Soviet power in 1945. He then analyzes Korean politics and American policies in Seoul as well as in the hinterlands.

Arguing that the Korean War was civil and revolutionary in character, Professor Cumings shows how the basic issues over which the war was fought were apparent immediately after Korea's liberation from colonial rule in 1945, leading to the effective emergence of separate northern and southern regimes within a year, extensive political violence in the southern provinces, and preemptive American policies designed to create a bulwark against revolution in the South and communism in the North.

In continuing his argument that the Korean War was civil and revolutionary in character, Bruce Cumings examines the internal political-economic development of the two Korean states and the consequences, for Korea, of Cold War rivalry between the United States and the Soviet Union. He investigates the intense border fighting and internal political instability that preceded the Northern invasion and challenges the notion of sudden Soviet-sponsored intervention. He discusses, among other topics, the containment doctrine as applied to South Korea and the subsequent adoption by the U.S. of a "rollback" policy aimed at eliminating communism in North Korea.

"This is a tremendously important book on a remarkably complex and engaging subject. As in the first volume, Cumings brings to the project passion and intellect, prodigious research, and personal involvement. Determined to go beneath surface appearances, he vividly portrays the ways in which the North and South Korean regimes established and wielded power from 1947 to 1950. His investigation shatters numerous myths about the 'democratic south' and 'Sovietized' North." – Michael Schaller, author of "Douglas MacArthur: The Far Eastern General".]

[The Yi Dynasty's twenty-seven kings ruled Korea for 519 years (1392-1910). The kings, as absolute monarchs, ruled with the assistance of nobles. Except for a few heroic and benevolent monarchs, the kings reigned but not ruled, because many of them were put on the throne in early youth and state affairs were managed by powerful nobles who engaged in factional strife and scrambled for more power for selfish motives.

"Worship of the powerful" was the traditional policy of the ruling classes. The king's court maintained friendly relations with China, but it closed its doors to the rest of the world until the later part of the Dynasty. In its early years arts and crafts of a creative nature flourished. But as time went by the effeminate kings sought tender delights in their palaces more than the stern duties of government, and the ambitious nobles became corrupt, enriching their own lives at the cost of the common people. Thus the dynasty and the country were led to ruin at last when the country became a bone of contention among strong neighbours. The glorious heritage of the ancient culture of Korea thus decayed, until it could bear a new luster in the rebirth of a new nation, the fresh offshoot of a new civilization.]

[Korean studies has been shaped in diverse ways since the beginning of Korea's modernization in the late nineteenth century. Korean studies as we know today can be said to be the result of indigenous and non-indigenous traditions interacting closely with and mutually influencing each other. What follows in this book is a collection of various portraits of Korean studies with its complexity and diversity originating from a coalescence of these two traditions. Part 1 of this book introduces eleven Korean scholars who have contributed to the development of Korean studies from the end of Joseon dynasty through the Japanese colonial rule to the modern period. Part 2 consists of interviews with prominent scholars working in the field of Korean studies abroad mainly in the US and East Asia.

A glimpse into Koreanists at home and abroad is provided as they share their personal backgrounds such as their personal histories of how they became interested in Korean studies and their views and positions on this subject as an intellectual endeavor and an academic program. In addition, each interview and review invites the readers to engage in serious conversation with these scholars on many of the important and sometimes controversial issues such as the identity of Korean history, the root of capitalism in Korean history, colonial modernity, nationalism, Confucianism, and what was frequently referred to as the "East Asian" perspective. This book contributes to the productive discussion for envisioning the future of Korean studies and will become a bridge for mutual understanding and exchange between diverse and controversial views.]

[This book explores the structure of English in relation to a number of variables. The first four chapters focus on the distance variable. Chapters I & II discuss distance as a variable in proximity-triggered structural reduction; Chapters III and IV examine distance as a factor in structural coding of various other types. The last four chapters have to do with "conservation of mass;" as it figures in the structure of English. Chapter V is an overview of the conservation phenomenon in English with the remaining three chapters devoted to specific manifestations thereof.

An empirical account of the language, the present volume addresses some functional questions about the structure of English. These questions relate to word order, style, language processing and systematic variation of meaning and form, among other things. They also bear on word formation with reference to affixation, cliticization and feature inheritance. Thus this book should arguably be of interest not just to teachers and learners of English but also to linguists, theoretical as well as applied.]

Life Tables for Korea includes various statistical tables which explain in detail the long-fading process from the birth to the death of people's life. In short, these tables show the possible average life-span of people by age group-by the average life-span, we can measure and estimate how long any person belonging to an age group can live if we assume that people would die according to the death probability by age group. Furthermore, the life tables are used as basic data for the projection of population, the calculation of insurance fees and the establishment of compensation, etc. Life tables are produced based on the administrative reports on vital events(death).

This book is a collection of memoirs by Lee Tong Won, the former foreign minister responsible for finalizing the normalization treaty between Korea and Japan in 1965. Despite the controversy surrounding Park Chung Hee in Korean history, his administration is credited for spawning Korea's rapid economic development and leading its transformation from an impoverished agricultural nation to a modern industrialized powerhouse. However, those who helped Park in the process have hardly been given any recognition. As told by one of the dynamic members of Park's early post-revolution team, this book presents the untold stories behind one of the most turbulent periods of Korean history. This book gives the reader an accurate picture of what went on behind the scenes in the formative years of Korea.

[The 21st century is an era of knowledge based economy. It is a transition period where the focus is being shifted from industrial capital to knowledge. The Korean people have more potential than any other nation to adapt well and excel in the knowledge-based economy of the 21st century. Korea has a precedent of having achieved democracy through its own dedication and sacrifice. It will especially make exclusive developments in the culture industry, which will be one of the core industries of the 21st century, due to the outstanding cultural creativeness of the Korean people.]

The 21st century is an era of globalization, we must adapt to this trend and must not confine ourselves to the boundaries of our nation but look at the world with a broader perspective and participate in the global stage. We must enter an era of global competition and cooperation in all areas ranging from economics to culture. In that sense, the development of inter-Korean relations is imperative not just for the benefit of the two Korean people to fully participate in the trend of globalization and become a key player in this time and age.]

[It is a difficult task to build a durable peace regime on the Korean peninsula. Since the division of the Korean peninsula, the cold-war structure has continued for six decades, while the Armistice regime has lasted for over five decades. The Korean peace regime is not a thing that can be accomplished overnight through one political leader's strong resolve or through a one-time diplomatic declaration. The fact that some experts intentionally deny the existing South-North confrontation does not facilitate the advent of a peace regime on the Korean peninsula. Moreover, a peace regime is harder to realize when we stand still and allow an arms race to be pursued in parallel with the strengthening of respective security alliances.]

Under these circumstances, how can Koreans build a durable peace regime on the Korean peninsula? This book is the result of the author's efforts to find an answer to this question.]

Local autonomy and the efforts to promote it in Korea are also given space, as this has been one of the main areas, in which the author engaged during his "liberal times" in Korea.]

[The Korean war in the 1950s was the highest point of confrontation between the Eastern and the Western blocs that actually came to an end with the pulling down of the Berlin Wall in 1989. Only a few countries survived the collapse of realsocialism, including the people's Democratic Republic of Korea. Thus the question of the status on the Korean Peninsula, including the question of reunification, still remains outstanding t the turn of the XX century.

In the conclusion the author puts forward the view that the change in the PDR of Korea are inevitable, that the question of peaceful reunification of Korea cannot be postponed ad infinitum, but that the agony of the regime in Pyongyang can last for some time to come. not excluding various incident prone situations that tend to correct expert and scientific prognoses.]

[This study analyzes the maneuver for control and influence between the Americans and the South Koreans for military stability, political attention, and economic assistance in the seven-year period after the conclusion of the Korean War. Based on multi-archival research in the Republic of Korea and the United States, it is argued that Syngman Rhee resorted to the diplomacy of feigned collapse and manipulated weakness to maximize American attention and assistance. In its efforts to put the containment policy to practice, the Eisenhower administration resorted to soft and hard measures to contain its unpredictable Korean ally. Rhee's skillful exploitation of Korea's symbolic and later geopolitical prestige as an anti-colonial but anti-Communist Asian nation helped to redefine the rules of allied relations. Analyzing how a small nation influenced a global power underlines the minor power's resourceful strategy of exploiting its weakness and illuminates the complexities of America's predominance in the early years of the Cold War. From Korean threat of unilateral military action to American plans for Rhee's overthrow, from manufactured national collapse to warnings of suspension of aid, U.S. – Korean relations in the years after the Korean War serves as a test case for the direction and character of trends in the post-Cold war era.]

[Labour history is an endless struggle for 'more democracy and better quality of life'. In this process, labour's capacity of serious social disruption through its link to accumulation and political process is most likely to threaten deepening democracy. Consolidating democratic stability, in this respect, is dependent on whether working-class interest can be reconciled and institutionalized. As western industrialized democratic nations have showed, democratic consolidation is a process of managing social tension and resolving political conflict through the incorporation of the growing labour forces arising from capitalist industrialization into institutional circle of politics.]

[Articles collected in this volume share some common understanding. They all agree that Japan can play an important and constructive role in facilitating the process of Korean unification. Moreover, Japan has functional and moral imperatives in helping both Koreas materialize peaceful national reunification. Most authors in the volume also believe that the unification by absorption scenario, which is predicated on a big bang in the North, is neither plausible in the short run nor desirable for security, political, and economic interests of Japan and South Korea. They strongly advocate an incremental, pragmatist way to the Korean problem based on the promotion of gradual exchanges and cooperation.]

[Although Wonhyo inherited the teachings of Madhyamika Buddhism, his philosophy is extremely positive due to the influence of Taoism. Contrary to Nagarjuna, who denied the establishment of all doctrines, Wonhyo integrated them into one inclusive system. This sharp contrast between the two philosophers does not mean that their ultimate philosophical goals lie in opposite directions. Rather, their differences are induced by based on their differing heremeneutic concerns. However, it is obvious that Wonhyo's all-comprehensive understanding of Buddhism cannot be explained without a discussion of the influence of Taoism. Wonhyo's hermeneutic perspective itself is established on a thoroughly comprehensive understanding which integrates the two traditions of Indian Buddhism and Taoism.]

[This book describes and evaluates the influence of shamanism on spiritual power in Christianity of Korea. Research methodology employed includes both fieldwork and literary surveys. The author posits that Christianity in Korea is separated into two categories: orthodox belief and belief based on folk tradition - or, official Christianity and folk Christianity. The former is heavily influenced by the perspective of Western scientific tradition and the latter by shamanism. Where the gospel has been accepted, its core contents have sometimes been syncretized with shamanistic thought. This book is composed of eight chapters, including "Perceptions of Spiritual Power in Korean Shamanism," "Perceptions of Spiritual Power in Korea Christianity," "Biblical Perspective and Spiritual Powers," "Syncretistic Adaptations from Korean Shamanism," and "Authentic forms of Contextualization." Having researched the relationship between Christianity and shamanism for 20 years, the author has dealt with the theoretical and practical relationships that exist between shamanism as a culture and the Christian gospel. The author also says it is important to understand how a great many of the religions imported from foreign countries have been largely influenced and affected by shamanism. The author strongly recommends that Christian readers further contextualize the gospel in Korea's shamanist context..]

[There has been little investigation of the concept of filial piety in changing times, and virtually no empirical analysis of how filial piety is perceived and practiced in Korea as well as in other countries. Articles in this book present specific items and measures indicating behavioral as well as attitudinal expressions of filial piety that have been identified through an extensive review of literature, a series of empirical studies of adults and elders, and cross-cultural studies of the expressions of filial piety.

This book offers the readers conceptual tools and guides to practice and research elder care and elder respect in modern times, and to understand the continuity of family support, interdependent relations between generations, and the resilience of filial piety tradition in the East Asian cultural context.]

[Cultural Studies in Asia offers accounts of the kinds of cultural studies which have been or are being – carried out in selected Asian countries or have given examples of the kinds of contemporary cultural studies interpretations being carried out. This book also offers normative viewpoints regarding what kinds of cultural studies ought to be done in Asian countries.]

The grand theme of this book is "the meaning of cultural studies in the age of globalization." The reflexive concern of almost all of the contributors to this book, in one way or another, has been with the intellectual identity of cultural studies. But this book also touches upon another related issue, which has emerged –namely that of the role of cultural studies intellectuals in the context of global cultural change.]

[From Preface :

This book deals with sexual violence and feminism from three different standpoints, theoretical, empirical and practice-oriented. The first part of this book is concerned about theoretical underpinnings as well as historical background of feminism and Korea while the second part examines concrete empirical problems of "Women as victims of violence." Addressed to practical issues, the third part focuses on "women as agency to change." Written during the last fifteen years, and mostly based on the Korean experience of Sexual violence and feminism, this book is intended to pursue a dialogue with the western scholars by sensitizing our attention to the relationship between theory and women's reality or between academic research and Social movement.".]
