[This book reproduces, translates and annotates two manuscripts that shed new light on the social and institutional history of Taiwan. The Dutch Formosan Placard-book is a compilation of all placards issued by the governors of Taiwan between 1629 and 1643. These placards contain ordinances and laws that regulated daily life in the colony. The Dutch Formosan marriage and baptism records list the names of about 350 citizens who got married at Zeelandia City and whose children were later on baptized. These records vividly depict local life styles in 17th century Taiwan and tell the story of over 40 families in Zeelandia.]

[The Reciprocity Principle in the International Regulation of Economic Relations deals with an important principle of international trade law – the reciprocity principle, which is enshrined in the GATT and past seven negotiation rounds held under the auspices of the GATT, as well as some domestic laws. This book examines the idea of reciprocity from three aspects, namely reciprocity among equals, effects of reciprocal concessions for third countries, and non-reciprocity between unequals. It presents a comprehensive discussion on the features, functions as well as the effects of reciprocity principle. It is expected that a proper formula of reciprocity can be established so that the idea of reciprocity will not be employed as a means for distorting trade effects.]

[The Taiwan yearbook provides the most current and authoritative information on Taiwan, as well as annual updates of major events, political and social trends, and statistics. The 2005 edition contains new facts, figures, and developments to clearly describe Taiwan's conditions in 2004, and features two new sections for the readers' convenience. First, "The year in Review" gives a quick recap of major events of the past year at the front of the book. Second, each chapter now begins with a summary of the important developments over the past year. The yearbook offers a comprehensive and cohesive overview of most fields of interest concerning Taiwan. The 22 chapters provide details on history, government, national defense, foreign relations, education, economics, environmental protection, science and technology, relations with China, and other important aspects of Taiwan. In-depth essays, color photos, graphs, charts and tables assist the reader in understanding Taiwan in the context of 21st century globalization. The five appendices present a chronology of events in 2004, a time-table covering 1949 to 2003, a summary of national holidays and memorial days, information for tourists, and a comparison of Romanization systems. Finally, the "Who's who in Taiwan" section lists prominent leaders across the political spectrum and from all walks of life.]
