[Indonesia is known as an archipelagic country as the larger part of its territory is covered by sea. Little is known, however, about the people who make their living by exploiting the country's marine resources, i.e. the fishermen.

How have they experienced the socio-economic and political ups and downs of their country? What are their cultural views of the aquatic world on which they depend/ What are the problems they face in their daily lives? How do they try to solve them, and with what results? They are generally seen as the country's poorest social category, but how did that poverty come into being, and is it still true in present-day Indonesia.]

Minahasa ; Cultural Anthropology

$ 40.00

[The present book deals with the Minahasans, who live in the extreme northeast of the island of Sulawesi, formerly Celebes, in Indonesia. The Minahasans occupy one of the most fertile places of that part of the world. Up until the beginning of the nineteenth century the Minahasans still lived in tribal groups, speaking different thought related languages. With the coming of the colonial powers dramatic changes set in, and by the middle of that century the Minahasans converted en masse to Christianity. Minahasa became incorporated into the market economy of the Dutch east Indies and after initial set backs the Minahasans achieved considerable economic progress. Many Minahasans enlisted in the Dutch East Indian army, and the use of Dutch and Malay became widespread. Soon Minahasa was dubbed the twelfth province of the Netherlands. The integration of Minahasa into the Indonesian Republic did not proceed smoothly, but nowadays the region has found a firm position in the Republic, with Manado, its main town, as the capital of the Province of North Sulawesi.]

[This study provides a cognitive and in-depth view of the lives and meanings of the people of Inanwatan, a south coast Bird's Head people of Papua (Indonesia). Inanwatan is placed within the wider context of (eastern) Indonesian and Melanesian fields of study. The author discusses Inanwatan world views that center on models of the human body, fertility, and reproduction. Bodies are considered as microcosms, constructed by and constructive and relationship. These relationships are regulated by consumption and feeding rules, involving notions of sociality and codes of moral conduct. This way individuals attempt to manipulate social and ritual relationships, and deal with evil powers. By exposing what is hidden behind the surface of sociality, this study unravels the traffic of life force or patterns of identity formation, or, in the words of Inanwatan Informants, it reveals the intestines of the body.]

Includes Bibliography and Index

[Renowned investment advisor Marc Faber sets out to find tomorrow's gold-the outperforming asset classes of the future. Far from being a sensational reading of the runes, this book delves deep into the past, to chart how old investor trends developed and assess how new patterns might emerge. And from this dramatic landscape- a world in which economic, social and political conditions are morphing at an alarming rate -Faber identifies investment opportunities. Asia's three-billion-strong population will have a profound effect on the world, writes Faber, cautioning that today's richest cities and clusters of wealth are unlikely to retain their exalted positions in the future.]

[This book is about China's future in this emerging knowledge economy, and about the strategies that it should pursue. A new world requires new understanding, both of global trends and of their impact on Chinese realities. Nor is it sufficient to learn from the developed countries, or to apply models successful elsewhere in East Asia. Each country must develop its own response t the knowledge economy, to meet its own needs.

The book brings together many voices - distinguished Chinese academics and scholars, Chinese practitioners and policy-makers, leading experts from the OECD and the World Bank, and academics from Australia and several other countries. Each of these provides a distinctive contribution to understanding this central issue facing China and its people.]

[Armenians are one of the most scattered races in the world. Whether enticed by better conditions elsewhere or forced to flee by conquest, they have put down roots in many new lands. When conditions for some Armenians long domiciled in Persia, became untenable they looked for new home, turning towards India and later the British trading settlements at Penang and Singapore. Although no more than 830 Armenians ever lived in Singapore and Malaysia, they played a significant role in the social, civic and economic life of the early British settlements in both countries. The Armenians achievements were quite incommensurate with their minute numbers. Not only did Armenians become respected citizens during their lifetimes, but four of Singapore's icons own their existence to them: the Straits Times newspaper, Singapore's national flower – the Vanda Miss Joaquim orchid, Raffles Hotel and Church of St Gregory the Immaginator.]

[From Introduction :

I invite you to share in the atmosphere of the social life of those first European traders, missionaries and official representatives in this tropical paradise of that time long ago, paying early morning social calls and spending the afternoons picnicking in the country or promenading down broad thoroughfares in horse -drawn carriages. Enter into the lavish evening gatherings of rustling silks, stylish banquets and enchanting dinner dances, dressed in magnificent costumes of the finest thread; and for the governor's ball, the latest fashions from Paris and London just arrived by ship.

You'll read as well, of the hardships experienced at sea on that month-long voyage to the East : of sharing space on a 45 meter-long sailing ship with 350 other passengers, all male, who hadn't bathed since the start of the trip. Among them could be found adventurers, runaways and prisoners. Every third person on board, whether sailor or passenger, fell ill during the voyage. One of every ten died, their corpses thrown overboard to be eaten by the sharks. Storms at sea could last for days, producing waves capable of breaking the masts of ships struggling hundreds of meters above the ocean bottom]

[Formand function of pitch movements in Indonesian applied the method of analysis-synthesis to the intonation, or speech melody, of standard Indonesian. The primary aim of this study was the construction of a phonetically explicit, and experimentally verifiable, intonation model. After an introductory chapter on the language and a literature survey a number of phonetic experiments are reported, in which acoustic and perceptual speech processing techniques were used to analyze and model the intonation patterns of human speakers. The results were experimentally evaluated in terms of both formal and functional adequacy. For the first method, Indonesian listeners compared the acceptability of model-generated intonation contours with original melodies produced by a human speaker. The second approach concentrated on two major functions of intonation : accentuation (the highlighting of important syllables, words or phrases) and prosodic boundary marking (the demarcation of coherent groups of words within an utterance.) Finally the author discusses possible application in the fields of education and speech technology.]

LITERATURE

Puspakrema : A Javanese Romance from Lombok / Th. C. Van Der Meij
Leiden, Netherland : Research School, CNWS Publications, c2002
230 p.; 24 cm
Includes Bibliography
CNWS Publications : No. 110
90-5789-071-2
$ 45.00

[This book signifies a rare effort to present a text from the island of Lombok, Indonesia, the Literature from which has been virtually neglected up until now. Written in Javanese and preserved in numerous palm-leaf manuscripts – one of which is presented in translation here – the text is, oddly enough, unknown in Java. The story which unfolds is an account of a young prince from Puspakrema who is abducted by a golden peacock. The Chain of events which is set in motion from that point onwards involves a quest in search for a cure for the king of Sangsyang, who suffers from an inability to sire children. After many adventures, romantic encounters and battles, the prince cures the king and succeeds in establishing a kingdom of his own.

In order to explore the various facets of this tale and enhance our understanding of this beautiful story, the author presents the text from the perspectives of two different contexts, namely that of Lombok and that of the 'Modern reader'.

[Good governance can be described as the manner in which power is exercised by society in the management by various levels of government of the country's social, cultural, political, and economic resources. Good governance is reflected in the effective, efficient, honest, equitable, transparent and accountable performance of governing. It is therefore no exaggeration to state that an understanding of this process is essential to any efforts at furthering the discourse on good governance and encouraging the eventful adoption of full democratic Practices during this era of "Reformasi".]

[This book focuses on urban government in the 1990s. Currently problems of urban government hold the spotlight as settlement patterns change rapidly as a result of ongoing urbanization. Alongside an overview of the relevant legal institutional arrangements emphasizing government autonomy, representative government and law making special attention is paid to spatial planning as a specific task of urban government.]

For this study, field research was conducted in three Indonesian cities; Bandung, Padang and Manado. These research sites all three of them provincial capital, share an almost identical legal institutional lay-out. Yet there are significant differences, as for instance in urban history, level and pace of economic development, surrounding natural and built-up environment, and the degree of urbanization.]

Islam and Nationalism : Agus Salim and Nationalist movement In Indoensia During the Early Twentieth Century / Erni Haryanti Kahfi

Jakarta : Logos, c2001

xi, 157 p.; 21cm

Includes Bibliography and Index

979-626-096-4

[Agus Salim has a distinct position among the western educated young Indonesians and the advocates of Islamic modernism. Living in the times of political and ideological formulation, Salim exerts a noticeable influence and is even acknowledged as the most important figure in formulating the political ideology of modern Indonesian as he manages to work for both Indonesia and islam to bring both to a condition from which they can develop, realize their potential and achieve the right to manage their country.

As a devout Muslim scholar, his major contribution is the redefinition of Islam in contemporary Indonesia and giving it a practical application in politics. He affirms that Islam is compatible with the needs of every era, including the modern one. This book deals with his genuine view on Islam and nationalism in modern Indonesia.]

SOCIOLOGY

The Population of Indonesia : Regional Demographic Scenarios using a Multiregional method and Multiple data Sources / Salahudin Muhidin

Netherland : Rozenberg Publishers, c2002

344 p.; 25cm

90-5170-596-4

$ 60.00

[The Population of Indonesia is a study that aims to contributes to a better understanding of the regional population dynamics, both retrospectively and prospectively. The study considers population in a multiregional system. Regional demographic processes are interlinked and jointly determine the growth and structure of the population in the different regions. Recently, the regional dimension procures a prominent role in development planning in Indonesia.

This book outlines a detailed analysis of the changes in Indonesian regional demographic variables during the last three decades. It provides an assessment of the past population projections, as well as the advantages offered by available demographic data sources. The multiregional projections result in plausible and likely size of the population in Indonesia and its regions up to the year 2020.

Another novelty of this study, in the context of Indonesia, is the application f demographic models for estimating the age-specific fertility, mortality, and migration rates. The study utilizes demographic data from multiple sources to construct the base data for projections. As a result, the methods and analyses developed in this study can also be utilized for other countries, where the regional differences or the characteristics of demographic data sources are similar to those in Indonesia. A Study of Indonesia's regional demographic scenarios has, therefore, a wide international relevance.]
