Mañosa: Beyond Architecture discusses the work of Ar. Bobby beyond his architectural practice, with bilingual text in English and Filipino by Gerard Lico. Departing from a purely architectural discussion, this book bares the intricacies of Ar. Bobby’s design philosophy and his prolific endeavors outside architecture—from materials experimentation, testing, and industrial design, to music and performance. The intersections of these pursuits enriched his architectural practice with a creative spirit that espouses the lively Filipino spirit.

Buildings are historical records that palpably manifest the highs and lows of a society, and how that society creatively responds to environmental imperatives, the technological milieu, power structures, and even material constraints. Architecture, therefore, is history built of wood, stone, concrete, steel, and glass among others, awaiting to be deciphered to recover the stories it had witnessed in the past. It is hoped that this book will connect us to this past by providing a channel through which walls could talk, and, at the same time, allow us to project into the future as we gain wisdom from the past framed by this book. As we experience the conditions that shape Filipino architecture today with a level of criticality endorsed in this book, we will be in a better position to decide what direction to take for Philippine Architecture to break new grounds.

Chinatown Is Not A Place / Jullie Yap Daza

“Chinatown is not a place,” declared journalist-author Jullie Yap Daza to her friends. Now that sentence is the title of her latest book.

Technically, Chinatown is only one square kilometer in size, an area surrounded by streets whose real estate values rival Makati's. If it's not a place, what is it? In Daza's words, Chinatown is as much about the Binondo-born as the Greenhills-bred. It is remembering the hard-working "Intsik" who rose from rags to riches as it is about raising today's generation of Chinese Filipinos who, like her own grandchildren, show no trace of the Chineseness that once set their ancestors apart as a minority group in Philippine society.

The three country studies in this volume reflect the disempowerment of indigenous women, resulting from intersecting factors over time and space in heterogeneous societies in a part of South Asia. The complex barrier created by overlaying sheets of colonial oppression and discrimination, patriarchy and feudalism...has yet to be addressed substantially if we are to achieve the goals set in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the present Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

The stories that emerge reveal that in various indigenous communities, indigenous women are hurdling barriers in arenas beyond their traditional domestic domain. Although still marginalized and burdened by multiple work, indigenous women are proving that they can actively engage in their community's economic and political development, rather than remain passive receivers of programs and policies.

It is to the outstanding great credit of the Communist Party of the Philippines that it is one of the proletarian revolutionary parties of the world successfully leading the people's democratic revolution through protracted people's war under the theoretical guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Maoism. It is widely recognized as a torch-bearer of the world proletarian-socialist revolution, whose resurgence is being ushered in by the anti-imperialist and democratic mass struggles all over the world and by the intensification of all major contradictions: between labor and capital; between the imperialist powers and the oppressed peoples and nations; among the imperialist powers themselves; and the US and China as the chief imperialist rivals.

No one better can provide an analysis, insight, and recommendations for implementation on the IPRA than her, who has been working with indigenous communities on the front lines for well over nineteen (19) years. In this book, Atty. Pimentel has provided a comprehensive and practical guide to the law as well as reference to international best practices. She imbued this book with her real-life experiences and aspirations for attaining the full potential of the law in safeguarding the cultural integrity and rights of our indigenous brothers and sisters. She has given a careful choice of authoritative opinions, policy instruments and experiential learnings from the field will be found in each chapter of the book in a reader-friendly narrative for a broad range of stakeholders.

Produced by a genuine advocate with a humble heart for the cause of one of the most vulnerable sectors of Philippine society. This book seeks to bridge the huge gap of understanding who indigenous peoples are, their rich culture and unique traditions as well as the rights afforded them as embodied in the IPRA.

A collection of letters in English and Filipino left unsent. Every day, we meet people with stories of regret to tell. I have written for them letters that they should have given to their persons of interest. They may not be able to give these to them because of circumstances like death, distance, or simply that their part of the story is over, but reading it now can somehow give them closure. These are the words that we wished we said. These are the emotions that we felt but failed to let someone else feel. Maybe because we were caught up with a lot of mishaps and misalignments. Maybe the options that we chose were wrong. Maybe we were busy making ships that never touched the sea or making airplanes that never saw the sky.

These moments happen so fast that in the blink of an eye, they are gone.

Don't wait for cosmic alignments. Say it and mean it, before it's too late. If you can relate to the letters, feel free to give these to people in your life...so they can serve their purpose now, despite being once too late for someone else.

Six students. Six mentors. Twelve stories. One country's fate. In 2017, college professor Jocelyn Martin invited her freshmen English classes to write fiction stories about the issue of extrajudicial killings in the Philippines. Six of the best stories were chosen for publication. Her fellow teacher Cyan Abad-Jugo invited professional writers to mentor these students in polishing their stories and in learning more about how to process this very complex topic, all while contributing their own written pieces in response. What resulted was an anthology of creative responses to a crucial subject, a conversation between generations, and a memorial against oblivion. Triggered is YA (young adult fiction) written by YA. Edited by Jocelyn S. Martin and Cyan Abad-Jugo.
