The Other Side of Development

In the present study, Rudolf Hegger relates the archetypal symbolism of Naga and Garuda to the practical realities of development co-operation. He illustrates the decisive role that Naga and Garuda forces are playing in local as well as international development work. Meaningful development will always depend on both: the competitive interaction and the complementary unity of our instinctive commitment (Naga) and our detached reflection (Garuda)

The Chitawan Tharus in Southern Nepal : An Ethnoecological Approach

Author : Ulrike Muller-Boker; Translated by Philip Pierce

Series : Nepal Research Centre Publications No.21.

The Chitawan Tharus, an ethnic group in southern Nepal, are the focus of the present publication. The attempt is made to see the environment through the eyes of those who live and act within it. In so doing, the work offers valuable stimulus for development policy strategies that promulgate development from bottom up.

After elucidating the theoretical foundations of the ethnoecological approach Chitawan and its inhabitants are introduced. Subsequent chapters deal with the natural surroundings from the perspective of the Tharus, together with their traditional forms of economy and technology. Finally, various evaluative concepts relating to the environment that clash with one another in the conflict over a national park are elaborated.

A Dictionary of Classical Newari : Compiled from Manuscript Sources

Chief Editor : Kamal P Malla

In the field of linguistics, Newari has long been considered a particularly important language. It is one of four Tibeto-Burman Languages with an old written tradition and the only member of the Himalayan Group with such a tradition. Classical Newari is this obviously important in the study of the development of the Tibeto-Burman Languages in general and the Himalayan Languages in particular. A Comprehensive dictionary would be an invaluable research tool in such study
