“This gallery of fifty distinctive individuals symbolizes the richness and the range of our country’s vast human resources, several of whom could obviously not be included, perhaps for reasons of space and time. While there may be a difference in their respective ages, Khurram Sohail — the older one! — and Afrah Jamal are exceptional examples of the talent, sensibilities and skills in a youthful Pakistani generation that is helping shape the future of a unique nation in the 21st century.” — Senator (r) Javed Jabbar

“I felt like Khurram was a man forever in pursuit of God, testing the limits of his passion.” — Abida Parveen

“Khurram Sohail is someone who provides nuanced character studies. Who has a keen eye and an intuitive approach; and whose professionalism and dedication set him apart.” — Intizar Husain

“Khurram is capable of crossing the threshold of madness for the sake of his craft.” — Sania Saeed

“I have no doubt that the reader will find his interviews of a wide range of eminent personalities enjoyable. It is not easy to elicit responses from such eminent people as Zia Mohyeddin, Talat Hussain, Kamal Ahmad Rizvi, Anwar Maqsood and others. Khurram has not overlooked literature, fine arts, musicians, journalists or that saintly soul, Abdul Sattar Edhi. A job well done Khurram Sohail.” — Naeem Bukhari

This is my story, the story of a German who has up to now lived for more than forty years in Pakistan, and has been very happy in her work, and with her patients, friends and co-workers and who loves the laughter and the sadness and the courage of the people, the beauty and the threatening grandeur of the country, and has suffered a lot witnessing the injustice and the violence and disregard for the dignity of the weak and the poor, and tried and struggled to add her small contribution to the fight against the evil and to strengthen the many many good and brave initiatives. But of course I have seen it with the eyes of a Westerner. And as this book is a kind of an account of my life, there will be many passages strange to my Muslim friends. However, this may not necessarily be a negative point because this mutual inter-cultural enrichment, which characterizes the Leprosy Programme of Pakistan, has only been possible because we have shared, listened to and clarified our ways of thinking, making this cross fertilization possible. — Ruth Pfau

In his autobiography, the author traces not only his personal life, but also the evolution of the chemical industry in Pakistan. Graduating with a degree in chemical engineering in 1968, he mentions introducing chemicals and processing practices that led to the development of everyday objects now found in almost every home in the country. From working in Libya in the 1970s, to moving to Russia and then coming back home, this is an entertaining account of a life well lived.

My DAWN Years

Exploring Social Issues

“A trail-blazer, Zubeida Mustafa has the courage of a journalist, the perfectionism of a researcher and an ability to see Pakistan through the lens of disadvantaged classes. In this fascinating memoir she tells us of her struggles to put social issues — education, health and social security — high on the national agenda. It also traces Dawn’s travel through technological revolutions in the print media, its efforts to bring out new features, such as Books & Authors, a sterling contribution to journalism and literature both. Further we learn about Dawn’s travails during the long spells of authoritarian rule, as it strove to deliver sane counsel to the state and the people, and to survive to fight for another day. A must read for journalists, their defenders and their victims both.” – I.A. Rehman

Human rights activist and columnist

“My DAWN Years is simultaneously Zubeida Mustafa’s inspiring autobiography; an insider’s perspective on Dawn’s evolution; a ringside view of Pakistan’s tumultuous decades; an activist’s account of the struggle for women’s rights and socio-economic development. It is a brave woman’s chronicle, demonstrating honesty and grit. She stands tall in an illustrious line of fearless journalists, writing with the courage of their convictions.” – Tahira Abdullah

Development worker, researcher and rights activist

If Born Again / Talat Rahim

Karachi: Paramount Books (Pvt.) Limited, 2018

xviii, 262p.

$ 30.00 / HB

474gm.

A truly engrossing book whose premise is a hypothetical question, the title of the book — If Born Again. The first book of its kind, which attempts to bring together high achievers and inspiring people from India and Pakistan — the two great nations, struggling to achieve a lasting relationship of trust and peace, even after a long period of seven decades. Fluttering through their childhood fantasies, relating anecdotes from their eventful lives, this book has some truly remarkable quotes from those interviewed.

Highly imaginative questions put to these personalities, famous in their own world of human domain that they represent, has resulted in responses, which are really very distinctive and heartfelt. The narratives which emerge, if taken together, lead to one message conveyed by all — the message of love and harmony.

All the twenty-two outstanding individuals interviewed are bonded by the cord of humanity. The arc of history favours those that courageously stand steadfast against the darkness of enmity to welcome a new dawn of friendship. This book serves to contribute in that great endeavour to build bridges across man-made chasms of separation and despair.

The monograph looks at the socioeconomic and political implications of the CPEC for Pakistan and attempts to provide a novel academic perspective to an area of study that has long been dominated by journalistic, news-like articles. The research gives insight into some of the most pertinent challenges of governance the CPEC raises but also highlights the diverse set of opportunities the mega-project has to offer. It advocates for urgent policy reform in the management of CPEC projects in order to prioritize the potential of local economies and pushes for a human development based approach in the design and implementation process. The monograph's unique selling point is its objective analysis of the CPEC that will hopefully provide readers multiple perspectives on a highly contentious yet highly relevant policy issue.

"Leafing through the history of Pakistan since its inception in 1947, the demand for replacing the education system inherited from the British with an Islamic system of education has been made by various social, religious and political quarters. In response, the successive governments in Pakistan established various commissions and committees to prepare guidelines for chalking out how Islamic education could be incorporated in the nation's general education within the broader objectives of a "true Islamic society and the state" ...A chronological approach adopted in these volumes would facilitate students and researchers to track down the historical evolution of the policy process as well as similarities and differences, if any, in the approaches of successive governments."

The Pakistan Anti-Hero : History of Pakistani Nationalism Through the Lives of Iconoclasts / Nadeem Farooq Paracha

viii, 396p.

9789694026053

$ 45.00 / HB

482gm.

In The Pakistan Anti-Hero, Paracha further explores the political and social evolution of Pakistan's polity which he first investigated in his best-selling debut, End of the Past. He expands this investigation by closely tracking the country's social and political trajectory through the lives of 'anti-heroes' – or those men and women whose place in history has transcended model heroic characteristics. From digging deeper into the psyches and histories of well-known men and women, to looking closer at the lives of those who have only briefly been explored, Paracha surveys the lives of scholars, ideologues, sportsmen, authors, politicians, militants, actors and even some obscure personalities that he met as a young man and then as a journalist. He cuts through the mainstream historical accounts of certain famous as well as notorious figures to study them in a more detached and yet empathetic manner to gain a starker understanding of a nation which has continued to develop through multiple existential crisis.

By 2050, Pakistan had achieved a miracle. It had transformed itself from a poverty-ridden, malnourished, corrupt and aid dependent country in 2015 to qualifying for High Income category by the World Bank and the top decile in both the Competitiveness index and Social Progress Index by 2050. Where once travel advisories warned people from visiting, it is now key destination for foreign investors, students, research and even tourism. Once a basket case seeking aid, now it has a large sovereign wealth fund. Once homeland of hordes on unemployed youth and an exporter of cheap labor today Pakistan is a center of higher learning, research and the 7th largest patent recipient in the world.

How did this transformation take place? Was it good policy or good luck? Was this process driven by external aid or domestic pressures? What can we learn from this experience?

Eminent economist Nadeem Ul Haque creates a fictitious narrative in this book to comment on the practice of public policy in Pakistan and how it can shape future change.

"This work is about factors that seem to affect the role of judiciary in Pakistan's governance. It mainly focuses on prerogative writ jurisdictions of high courts and original jurisdiction of Supreme Court to enforce fundamental rights and to provide adequate remedies against the ultra vires public actions. It attempts to locate reasons which hinder judiciary to ensure rule of law for good governance, tending to restrict judicial review to effectively review public policies and actions. The study discusses in some details that governments both democratic and non-democratic, have been conscious and often tried to counter the power of judicial review through amendments in constitutional history of the country."

This work attempts to discuss the rights of the child in Islam to caring, fostering and suckling. The work also highlights child's rights to be loved, right to life, health and education. Some other rights of the child such as the right to play, recreational activities, privacy, and decision making and respecting their views are also discussed in detail. The book describes rights of all children including orphans, step children and illegitimate children; In addition, the book presents duties of children towards their parents and parents towards their children under Islamic law. It depicts a comprehensive picture of some other aspects relating to child's right such as relations between children and their peers and impacts of neglecting child. The work also addresses the question whether there is any basis under Islamic law for female genital mutilation or FGM. It also takes into account several questions such as; what are the principles of Islamic law for child rearing; how should parents be responsible and accountable for ignoring their children; what is the role of the state in child protection; and what are the duties of a Muslim state in child protection?

Revisiting Second Language Materials : A Pakistani Perspective / Dr.

Asma Aftab

Karachi: Paramount Books (Pvt.) Ltd., 2017

9789696372912

$ 40.00 / HB

Language materials are tools (such as texts, activities and complete textbooks) utilized for language learning; in fact, the degree of language acquisition is largely dependent on the types of materials used in the classrooms. Thus language materials have been an important focus of literature in the past two decades. "Many of the books published are 'how to' books... but they are not based on research studies into materials" (Garton and Graves, 2014: 1). In contrast, this book presents a fresh outlook about the field of second language materials by illustrating and applying the theoretical assumptions in research involving comprehensive analysis of the ESL textbook scenario in Pakistan for the first time. The opening chapters encapsulate the concepts focusing on materials and other related areas and specify the practices deemed to be effective for second language learning. The main chapters discuss the findings highlighted through a recent study critically investigating the different educational aspects (primarily the textbooks) which have influenced the English language teaching context in Pakistan.

This book is relevant for practitioners and students associated with the fields of ELT, TEFL, TESOL, applied linguistics, and education as well as educational policy makers, English language teachers, and English language textbook writers in Pakistan and abroad.

Despite a 16% decline in terrorist attacks in 2017, Tehreek-e-Taliban Pakistan and its associated groups remained the most potent threat; they were followed by nationalist-insurgent groups, especially Balochistan Liberation Army and Balochistan Liberation Front. What has been quite alarming is the increasing footprints of Daesh, especially in Balochistan and northern Sindh, carrying out the deadliest attacks. These realities require concerted effort and a revision of the National Action Plan, country's counter-terror plan for yet ambiguity remains about who is responsible for NAP. It will be much better that parliament provides oversight to not only NAP, help revise it in light of new realities, but also lay down criteria for mainstreaming militants – which drew debate in 2017. These are some of the major findings of the Pakistan Security Report 2017.

A new book by prominent historian, Prof. Dr. Riaz Ahmad has been published, titled 'Pakistan Movement: New Dimensions 1935-1948'. The author has highlighted milestones of Pakistan Movement relating to the period 1935-1948 with focus on struggle of Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah for the rights of the Muslims of South Asia. The most salient aspect of this book is that it is based on thorough research by the author who based his work on source materials. The author studied the basic sources for his book not only in Pakistan but also from India and Britain. In that way the book is an authentic document of the critical phase of Pakistan Movement. The book is highly useful for the academics as well as students of Pakistan Movement. The 500 page book offers a details account of events relating to Pakistan Movement in quite interesting manner. Prof. Dr. Riaz Ahmad, Tamgha-i-Imtiaz and Aizaz-i-Fazeelat, is a scholar of national and international repute with over 40 years of teaching and research experience.

A line borrowed from the different articles written over many years construct a collage and a mosaic of ideas that the book presents:

It is a pity we suffer from the very diseases the Father of the Nation had pointed out in the very first year of our existence. Our society badly suffers from a deep- rooted structural imbalance. This imbalance has been manifested time and again but no serious effort has been made to repair this manufacturing defect. We need to examine whether individuals here were responsible for their sad plight or society failed to create opportunities and the right environment for the individual to exist. Our society exhibits a general trend to follow the herd. Fresh ideas, bold initiatives and new thoughts have stopped emerging. This denial of self-hood, disrespect for individuality and humiliation by the state, the government and society drives individuals to nothingness, indifference and makes them feel there is no purpose to their lives. Creativity is a must for the growth of individuals and the society.

We have turned into a society of imitators, impostors and mimics. Our attitude as individuals or as a group at the national level is casual and encourages ad-hoc thinking. We want to live for the moment; we have no confidence in the moments yet to come.

Political parties formulate broad-based alliances for temporary interests and gains. They increase their strength and influence, but for the same reason they weaken from within. Different powers are at play in Pakistan. Every power has to play its role in its sphere, but if there is a vacuum lies in some part of society, the other part is likely to stretch itself to fill the vacuum.

Pakistan was still only three years old, and danger was being felt that some elements were undermining the state in the name of religion. Today, this disease is 55 years old and acute. Terrorism has been at its extremes in the past few years. This juncture of history is teeming with disputes, crisis and clashes but at the same time it offers countless opportunities. History tells us that such decisive crossroads have appeared before also but instead of seeing the objective, we were swept away in a flood of emotions. To dwell on the past or discuss it is an exercise in futility. Our destiny should be very different from the on-going events. We must decide our destiny, determine our goals and devise means that will lead us towards them.

We should be active and united to stop these forces of darkness. The wheels of history always trundle forward. Time is very short. Think - shake your conscience out of its slumber.

The governing political elites in South Asia have failed to establish an 'inclusive society', at a time of profound global transformation and power shift. Even more unfortunate, Pakistan and India are bracing for yet another 'lost era' with their third generation gearing up for conflict. The chances of 'sleepwalking' into another conflict will always remain there. May be this time, both countries will walk into it, with their eyes wide open, but helpless. The ordinary people in South Asia have remained condemned to hope by those, who should have instead provided 'solutions' to them. India's protracted struggle for geo-political domination, massive arms imports, resumption of threats and coercive diplomacy are 'bad omen' for South Asia's future.

The continuation of misery, poverty, extremism, intolerance and hate in South Asia is not only baffling, but is a matter of serious concern to all of its inhabitants, and the international community at large. In his book, Ambassador Hasan Javed examines the factors contributing to malaise in South Asia, the enormous systemic/good governance challenges, as well as the opportunities.

Civil-military relations is the study of how the military interacts with the state and society. The management of civil-military relations is a key to effective governance, particularly in states undergoing the transition to democracy like Pakistan. Military is generally held in high esteem in Pakistan owing to its strong nationalistic character, keeping the arch rival India at bay despite the qualitative and quantitative differential and impressive performance in nation-building tasks. However, there is a perception that due to its perpetual stay in national polity, the civil-military relations are somewhat strained. Due to the authority and position it enjoys, perception of 'military elitism' has also emerged in the public, which draws criticism both locally and from abroad. The book is first of its type which gives out true picture of civil-military equation and suggests a pragmatic and viable options to keep this equation balanced for strengthening of our beloved country Pakistan.

In reading the recent interest of psychologist about the therapeutic benefits of religion to clients suffering from psychological disorders at once get the impression that this is a new phenomenon in the revolution of psychology. This is a particular worldview about the religion of Islam. However, keeping in view the long history of Islamization spread over more than sixty years, some Muslim psychologist pioneered the Islamic adaptation of western psychology. But most of their research was based on general efforts in proving the efficacy of this Islamic adaptation in the context of the strong rejection of most Muslim psychologists who used to believe that psychology was a 'scientific' discipline that had nothing to do with religion or philosophy. Nevertheless one of the early 'Islamizers' of psychology of the sixties, I could not have believed that I will live to see Islamic psychology, not only included in the curricula of many departments of psychology in Muslim countries but also being taught in England and the US. Professor Skinner is teaching Islamic psychology in Cambridge and Dr. Carrie in Iowa State University.

It is really very encouraging for us to see that at present new generation of Muslim psychologists have not only benefited from the past work but also is significantly contributing in developing more specialized theories and practices having specific evidence-based benefits to the clients suffering from psychological disorders. Chief among this new generation of scholars is our distinguished Professor Muhammad Tahir Khalily of the Department of Psychology in the International Islamic University of Islamabad.

His book that I am prefacing is quite timely. We are already familiar with the generalities of the spiritual dimension in helping the clients suffering from psychological disorders. However, developing more specific evidence-based research in this area can only be achieved by persevering researchers who are well-grounded in their specialization having the cultural and religious background of their people and who had been bestowed with a creative mind can get benefits from what modern psychology can offer or counter-offer to them. Professor Muhammad Tahir Khalily is bequeathed with these noble qualities.

The central theme of this book relates to the nature of the Islamic caliphate and its makeup. How did it actualize itself in the first century of Islam? What were the causes that led to its shift to monarchy? And finally when the change did take place, what was the Ummah's reaction to this change? To explain this, all the pertinent Ayat (verses) of the Qur'an that have relevance to the primary political issues have been compiled in the work to enable the readers to have a glimpse of the Islamic state that the Qur'an wants to have.

The second chapter deals with the principles of Islamic governance in the light of the Qur'an, the Sunnah, and the precepts and sayings of the prominent Ṣaḥābah (raḍi Allahu 'anhu).

The third chapter speaks of the distinguishing characteristics of the pious caliphate as known in the history.

The fourth chapter delineates the causes that led to the shift from the caliphate to monarchy. While the following two chapters discuss the difference between the caliphate and monarchy, the change that the monarchy caused and the way the caliphal fall led to schismatic polarization and conflicts among the Muslims, followed by the ulama's effort to bridge the cleavages wrought by the change in the system of governance as typified by Imām Abū Ḥanīfah's and Abū Yūsuf's works. Today when an ongoing debate is taking place on the nature of Islamic state, "political Islam" and relation between state and "religion", this research work of the Mawlana provides a resume of how the Qur'an and the Sunnah of the Prophet (pbuh), visualize a modern Islamic state.

The institutionalized fallacy of the West that Muhammad was an imposter and that he himself authored or plagiarized the Quran from biblical literature is unacceptable in view of what the history of prophecy says about the prophets and their characteristics. The author of Muhammad the Prophet Par Excellence and the Divine Origin of the Quran refutes this longstanding disinformation effectively. To do so, he traces the origin and development of prophecy from sources acknowledged by Jews, Christians, and Muslims alike. He highlights the common characteristics of prophets and then very objectively works out the Abrahamic norm accepted by all. It can be regarded as a universal touchstone to identify the true prophets. According to this syllogistic conclusion Muhammad cannot be denied prophethood since what authenticates all or any of the prophets, is also found to the highest degree in him. It also verifies his claim to being the bonafide recipient of the divine revelation – the Quran. As an inevitable corollary to this deduction, the arbitrary rejection of Muhammad as a Prophet amounts to rejecting all prophets.

The current debate on Islamic resurgence has brought issues relevant to the nature, characteristic and scope of an Islamic state and a distinctly Islamic political system into sharp focus. Many publications with widely varying theoretical positions and ideological implications have appeared on the subject. Most of them, however only report current political events in the contemporary Muslim world without making any attempt to deal with these events. Moreover even their accounts of the current political scene remain superficial and unrelated to the tensions between the imperatives of continuity and the demands for the change in the Muslim world.

In Mumtaz Ahmad's view, the contributions of the Muslims writers are equally dismal because they deal with the political doctrine and not political theory.

State, Politics and Islam represents a serious attempt to reformulate Islamic political theory in the context of today's political realities and problems.

Gateway to Serenity is a book about my journey of discoveries and sweet victories of learning to navigate culture and language, finding my love for the outdoors, and the heart-warming kindness of the locals. I knew my life would never be the same; something in me had changed and a city life would never be enough. I needed to chase beautiful sunsets, wildflower forest trails, vibrant cultures, fruit orchards and food bursting with distinctive flavours. It was absolutely essential to my sanity to step out of my comfort zone – gaining more independence, enhancing my communication skills, challenging my fears and insecurities. Traveling seems to give me a near constant adrenaline rush. When traveling it is not always smooth sailing, but the bumps along the road really help you to discover what you want out of travel, and what you don't want. This travel journal is about my first trip to Gilgit Baltistan – the most spectacular region of Pakistan, known for its geography, scenic beauty and majestic mountains. It is about what I learned, and the experiences I had. It is a collection of adventures, stories, memories and discovery.
