[This book is an in-depth analysis of the problems faced by the native peoples of Sarawak, most of whom live in longhouse communities in Borneo's tropical forests.

It describes the traditional social and economic system of swidden agriculture, and how their forest resources and way of life are increasingly threatened by the forces of 'modernisation'.

Focus is given on how the natives' customary lands are being encroached upon by the timber industry and development projects such as the construction of large dams. Included are oral testimonies from several native communities about their plight.

The book also analyses the social and environmental impact of logging activities, and provides suggestions on what can be done to resolve the natives' problems.

This book is essential reading for those interested in Sarawak, and its natives, the fate of the tropical forests and the rights of indigenous peoples in the Third World.]

[This book contains twelve essays dealing with the applications of economic science to analyse real world problems in Brunei. Based on per capital real GDP, Brunei has been consistently ranked the richest Muslim country in the world over the last 30 years. The country is also one of the richest in Asia. Due to the extensive welfare system created by the oil export revenue over the last 40 years, the country has become an affluent society with extensive participation of women and minority ethnic groups in the workforce, educational and health systems. The country retains strong religious and traditional cultural links including a monarchical system of government.

Brunei is scarcely covered in the published international economic literature including databases of key international lending agencies. Based on the use of the most recently revised government macroeconomic data and data gathered from several well-organised confidential surveys, the authors, all based in Brunei, have provided high quality analysis of several macroeconomic and microeconomic issues and emerging socio-economic problems in this fascinating country. This book will be useful for students, consultants, researchers, academics and policy makers around the world interested in Southeast Asian Studies, specific development issues involving small-sized oil-rich countries and other economic development issues especially those involving Islamic countries.]

[Packed into the relatively small area of Brunei Darussalam is an amazing plant diversity of nearly 3500 species of indigenous seed plants. Almost 3% of these are extremely rare and endemic to Brunei (i.e., not found anywhere else), and nearly half of the over-all Brunei seed-plant flora is not known outside of the botanically rich island of Borneo. Of the species documented, around 1900 species (i.e., more than half) are trees. This book gives an overview of Brunei Darussalam's varied rain forests and its incredibly rich plant wealth, and explains why the rain forests are an important aspect of conservation. It follows in the wake of the Checklist of Flowering Plants and Gymnosperms of Brunei Darussalam published in 1996 and heralds the beginning of the Tree Flora of Brunei Darussalam project, which seeks to document, in a series of volumes, the tree families and species found in Brunei. The new initiative, which for the first time will involve specialists collaborating to provide a means to identify Brunei trees in the form of a special Flora, is supported by the results of the Checklist and further research, and organized by the University of Brunei Darussalam, the Brunei Forestry Department and Brunei Shell Petroleum Company.]

[The story he tells is a sensitive and highly personal one, enlivened by the humour for which he is renowned among his associates and enriched by the modesty and tolerance which has brought him widespread regional and international respect among diplomats.

It follows his life as a child in post-WWII Brunei, a boy in the turbulent times of a South East Asian riven by war, anarchy and Cold War ideology, a student in London's "swinging sixties", a young prince finding a role for himself among his people and, finally, as a Minister of the Crown helping to chart his country's path in modern international affairs.

In offering his views, he paints a new picture of nation which has often been caricatured as merely "oil-rich" and of a governing process which has frequently been dismissed as autocratic and archaic. It is a description of a country and a system which admits its weaknesses and rejoices in its successes and its cherished values.

In its concluding chapters, it describes the growth of Brunei Darussalam's Foreign Service from its beginnings with a staff of four in a borrowed office to a fully established network of political, economic and diplomatic relations with over one hundred and forty nations in every part of the world.

It makes "Time and the River" more than a personal account.

Though avowedly non-academic, it is an important and moving addition to the understanding of Brunei's history from a South East Asian perspective... it is also a reminder of the special contribution all small countries have to offer if human diversity is to be preserved in an increasingly globalised and mono-cultural world.]

[This book traces the history of the state in modern times, from the early years of the nineteenth century when Brunei was first threatened by the spread of modern Western imperialism, to the eve of independence. The author surveys the evolution of Brunei's relationship with Britain during this period and shows how, despite the embrace of British protection, Brunei's rulers struggled to maintain the vestiges of autonomy and to control the state's destinies. The degree of success they obtained and the tumultuous events of the 1950s and 1960s, which helped pave the way for the restoration of Brunei's sovereignty, are examined and placed in perspective.]

[This study describes in detail the way in which Sultan Omar Ali Saifuddin conducted diplomatic relations with Great Britain in his efforts to restore the sovereignty and dignity of the Brunei monarchy, protect his dynastic interests as well as the interests of Brunei, resist British plans for forging political unions (first with the British colonies of North Borneo and Sarawak, and then with Malaysia), and attain self-government according to his own political agenda. But it is more than a biography of a remarkable man's life and his times. The book adds to our knowledge and understanding of modern Brunei and its political life, of the ambitions and activities of the Sultan, the British, and other principal actors in Brunei's political scene, and of British policy in the latter days of empire in Asia.]

[The 20th century history of Brunei Darussalam provides a unique case of decolonisation in the British Empire. The main arena for the tug-of-war between colonial and nationalist forces was the series of negotiations which culminated in the promulgation of the 1959 constitution. The struggle for supremacy between British colonialism and the traditional Malay monarchy was not only a struggle between conflicting economic and political interests, and between competing political ideologies, but also a duel between two powerful personalities: Sultan Omar Ali Saifuddien III and the British High Commissioner-cum-Governor Sir Anthony Foster Abell. To provide an insider's view of the period and of the personalities involved, the author has consulted British and Brunei records – notes, official dispatches and private correspondence – and has interviewed Bruneian personages who took part in the events.]
