The charismatic Xanana Gusmao shouldered the Herculean task of leading his east Timorese people to Independence. During the brutal 24-year war with Indonesia, he was transformed through crisis from being a young apolitical outsider into a hardened guerrilla commander and keen political strategist, who ultimately became the central unifying figure of east Timorese nationalism. This book focuses on his years in leadership and seeks to explain how the events of the time affected the development of his ideas, policies and strategies.

On 12 November 1991, Indonesian soldiers shot and killed over 200 people in a funerary march and pro-independence protest at the Santa Cruz cemetery in Dili, East Timor. These proceedings comprise some of the papers from an online international symposium marking the thirtieth anniversary of the massacre held on 9 - 10 November 2021. The symposium was held by the Timor-Leste Studies Association and the Centro Nacional Chega (CNC), Timor-Leste's national centre of memory and dedicated to filmmaker Max Stahl, whose footage of the massacre had played such a pivotal role in raising awareness about the Indonesian occupation of East Timor. Over two days, almost 30 research papers and first-hand accounts were presented in English, Tetum and Portuguese, looking at topics such as the organisation of the protest, the impact of the massacre, and how these events have been remembered and commemorated in Timor-Leste and elsewhere.

Timor-Leste's Maritime Boundaries

Dili: Maritime Boundary Office, Council for the Final Demilitation of Maritime Boundaries, 2016

1v.

$ 70.00 / PB

222gm.

Timor-Leste is a small, coastal country in Southeast Asia, positioned between two larger maritime neighbours. To the north, west and east lies the Indonesian archipelago. To the south lies the vast Australian continent, about 300 nautical miles across the Timor Sea. There are currently no permanent maritime boundaries between Timor-Leste and either of its neighbours, Australia and Indonesia. As a newly independent State, it is a priority for Timor-Leste to complete its sovereignty and establish its borders both on land and in the sea. This paper tells the story of Timor-Leste's struggle for sovereignty over its seas—from the past to the present, and what it means for the future. To provide clarity and context on this complex issue, the paper summarises the relevant principles of the law of the sea and sets out Timor-Leste's position on where its permanent maritime boundaries should lie in accordance with international law.

Includes portraits of victims of violations of human rights, and expressions of their sufferings and hopes for the future.
