This bilingual book features eyewitness accounts from Malaysians who were there, selected from Malaysiakini, LoyarBurok, Facebook, blogs and Twitter.

The writers were patriotic enough to brave severe warnings and a heavy clampdown by a government that did not seem to want to hear them – Malaysians who answered the call of duty to our future generations, and risked their comfort and well being so that they could tell their children and grandchildren: when it mattered the most, we stood up and were counted.

In their stories, we see Malaysians transcend politics to unite for a cause that is right of every single Malaysian, regardless of their ideology or background – a right to clean and fair elections.

Despite the momentous events of the years chronicled in these pages, the author's call for justice and freedom remains a constant.

Patriots & Pretenders : The Malayan Peoples' Independence Struggle / Kua Kia Soong

Patriots & Pretenders is the peoples' history of the Malayan Independence struggle, which challenges the 'official' version of how 'Merdeka' was won. While this country remains stuck in a racialist rut after 54 years of Independence, Patriots & Pretenders calls on Malaysians to break through to a people-centred non-racial agenda for change. From the lessons of the past, Kua outlines some pointers to the future which could form the Malaysian peoples' demands for the next generations.

Established in 1971 by Singapore, Malaysia, Britain, Australia and New Zealand, the Five Power Defence Arrangements (FPDA) has proved to be one of Asia's most enduring military pacts. Since its foundation, the FPDA has functioned as an important confidence building measure between its two Southeast Asian members, and has facilitated interoperability, professionalization and cooperation among the armed forces of the five countries. Crucially, its inherent flexibility and adaptability has enabled it to respond effectively to changes in the geopolitical environment as well as the emergence of new security threats. Now in its fortieth year, the FPDA remains a valuable component of Asia's security architecture in a time of change and uncertainty. This volume marks the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the FPDA. Regional and international scholars examine the primary motivations of the five members, the FPDA's contribution to regional security over the past four decades and explore possible future roles for the alliance in the context of emerging geopolitical trends and security challenges in the twenty-first century.
