When Gorkha laid siege to Kirtipur and began to close in, Jayaprakas Malla, the Last King of Kathmandu, sought military assistance from the Company. The Gorkhalis had already disrupted the trans-himalayan trade. The Company realized that these mountains warriors would soon put an end to its commercial expansion in northern India if they captured the Nepal Valley. Therefore, it decided to send an army expedition under Captain George Kinloch. The Gorkhalis and Kinloch's men met head-on in the valley of Sindhuli in the autumn of 1767.

My Way of Life and Thinking is the self-told story of one of the most outstanding entrepreneurs of the 20th century. No ordinary autobiography, this inspirational volume provides insight into Matsushita's approach to life and philosophy of management and is a testimony to his lifelong pursuit of entrepreneurship, leadership and an idealistic vision that began at an early age. The implications of his story are powerfully relevant today to people seeking to question what it is to live a meaningful life.

Hearsay & Versions in British Relations with the Kingdom of Kandy 1796 – 1818 / Upali C. Wickremeratne

This book is a study of the relationship between the British government and the Kandyan Kingdom between 1796 and 1818 in which new methods of assessing evidence are adopted and new views offered on a number of themes.

The existing historiography is based on a study of British primary and secondary sources in which primary sources preponderate and the documentary sources are neglected to a surprising degree. The unreliability of hearsay is not recognized and hearsay is far too often accepted as fact. The documentary evidence in the national archives at Colombo and Kandy has been neglected, too.

Magical Times in Ceylon/Sri Lanka is titled thus because it spans the time and events associated with a charming and enchanted country searching for its place in the world after having been ruled by colonial powers for centuries. It was like a 20-year old still using the political, legal and administrative structures inherited from the parent of an alien culture, and therefore simultaneously loving and hating those values, but very much unable to develop its own systems.

Strolling Around Phnom Penh / Jean-Michel Filippi

Cambodia: KAM Editions, 2012

150p. ; 22cm.

$ 40.00 / PB

324 gm.

Since Phnom Penh is conspicuous in its absence of tourist guidebooks and visitors usually spend about two days to see Wat Phnom, the Royal Palace, the National Museum and the Tuol Slaeng (S 21) Museum, the need for a new much richer way of glimpsing history was recognized and has been created. This book was written to offer a striking alternative: seven strolls through time and space, in the rich, colorful and dramatic history of Phnom Penh where history, anthropology, politics and anecdotes come together with rich glimpse into the past.

The book describes the author's experiencing with other teenagers living in the Mobile Child Unit in Democratic Kampuchea's 'killing fields' regime. The book reveals the darkened time when the author and his generation faced with hard labour without adequate food and health care, death threats, tortures, and murders. What described in the book is for the young generation's awareness of Cambodia's nightmare, and could be an additional memoir for the Khmer Rouge Tribunal to consider the serious child rights violation, a part of crimes against humanity, in the inner Democratic Kampuchea regime in 1975-1979.

A Trial in Burma : The Assassination of Aung San / Maung Maung

Yangon: UNITY Publishing House, 2012

115p. ; 22cm.

$ 25.00 / PB

180 gm.

The 19th of July is the Day of the Martyrs in Burma, the day Bogyoke Aung San and his colleague were mown down by assassins while they sat at their Executive Council meeting in 1947. The magnitude of the crime shocked the world and shook the young nation of Burma, then in the tenderness of rebirth.

This book gives, for the first time, the full story of the crime, with its background of politics and personalities, and of the trial of U Saw, himself a former prime Minister, and the men he directed. Glimpses of Burma's history in those crucial times come through in the pages of this book, and snapshots of the people who have had a hand in the writing of that history.

3. Power (Social sciences) - Sex differences - Burma

Gendering Asia Series, no. 7

$ 29.90 / PB

588 gm.

This is the first book to explore the relationship between gender and power in Burmese history from precolonial times to the present day. A key aim is to identify the sources, nature and limitations of women's power in Burma throughout history and thereby offer a broad understanding of how power is obtained and exercised today. The book thus examines the concept of "family" in Burmese political culture, how various influences like

Buddhism shaped Burmese concepts of gender and power, and how the effects of prolonged armed conflict, economic isolation and political oppression have constrained opportunities for women to attain power in contemporary Burma.

It all happened in 1876, during "the Year of Three Sultans" when a Bulgarian girl named Stephana made a journey to Salonika to convert to Islam and was subsequently abducted by a group of Christians. This event stoked tensions, and stirred outrage within the Muslim community. Public protests ensued, culminating in the murder of the French and German consuls by a Muslim mob on May 6, 1876.

Under the Stacks – a phrase which means buried under a pile or heap of books, papers, musty documents, unread volumes, and treasured ephemera bearing words embalmed by time. In its metaphorical sense, as used in this book, it refers to history interred in our nation's bones and collective memory, long hidden and concealed, either to be retrieved and remembered or to be altogether forgotten ...

This is the first ever book in English about Thai coins and the several types of money used by the various ethnic cultures that existed in this area.

It covers the time period from the earliest types of money, both in the form of coins and in other forms such as shells and various types of ingots used in what is now Thailand. It also includes the introduction of the baht currency system, a system based on divisions of eight (the octuple system), both in the form of pot duang and flat coins and the beginnings of the present day decimal coinage. It describes the development of Thai money through a continuous economic-historical review with excerpts from a variety of sources, including the Sukhothai inscriptions, the royal chronicles of Ayutthaya, the records of individual Dutch, French and Portuguese travelers and unpublished documents from the Royal Archives ...

China as a Sea Power 1127 – 1368 : A Preliminary Survey of the Maritime Expansion and Naval Exploits of the Chinese People During the Southern Song and Yuan Periods / Lo Jung-pang ; Edited, and with Commentary by Bruce A. Elleman

Lo Jung-pang (1912-1981) was a renowned professor of Chinese history at the University of California at Davis. In 1957 he completed a 600-page typed manuscript entitled "China as a Sea Power, 1127-1368", but he died before he could arrange for the work to be published. Bruce Elleman found the manuscript in the UC Davis archives in 2004, and with the support of Dr Lo's family prepared an edited version for publication.

Lo Jung-pang argues that during each of the three occasions when imperial China embarked on maritime enterprises (during the Qin and Han dynasties, the Sui and early Tang dynasties, and Sung, Yuan, and early Ming dynasties), coastal states took the initiative at a time when China was divided. Maritime trade and exploration subsequently peaked when China was strong and unified. It declined as Chinese power weakened, and China's people became absorbed by internal affairs, while state policy focused on threats from the north and the west. These cycles of maritime activity, each lasting roughly five hundred years, corresponded with cycles of cohesion and division, strength and weakness, prosperity and impoverishment, expansion and contraction.

The political, economic and social changes that have occurred over the past 60 years have shaped and transformed the childhood of children in Singapore. This book explores this transformation through anecdotes and memories through interviews with individuals hailing from different races and age groups, together with related archived materials from different sources. The components of childhood — birth, home, play, school, health and welfare — are revisited so as to provide useful insights about the past to young readers and at the same time serve as a nostalgic read for older readers.

Driven from Yunnan at the close of China's civil war, Chiang Kia-shek's defeated Chinese Kuomintang (KMT) armies retreated into Northeast Burma's remote Shan State in early 1950. Supported briefly by the American CIA and Thailand's military government, General Li Mi led those armies in an unsuccessful 1951 invasion of Yunnan. Back in Burma, they brought chaos that destabilized the new nation by allying with the Karen tribes and other armed insurgent groups to dominate the Golden Triangle narcotics trade.

Why, Benedict Anderson once asked, did Javanese become Indonesian in 1945 whereas the Vietnamese balked at becoming Indochinese? In this classic study whose innovative concept of space has wide applicability, Goscha shows that Vietnamese of all political colours came remarkably close to building a modern national identity based on the colonial model of Indochina while Lao and Cambodian nationalists rejected this precisely because it represented a Vietnamese entity. Specialists of French colonial, Vietnamese, Southeast Asia and nationalism studies will all find much of value in Goscha's provocative rethinking of the relationship between colonialism and nationalism in Indochina. First published in 1995, a major revision of this remarkable study is now issued, augmented with new material by the author and a foreword by Eric Jennings.
